Martial Law Is Declared in Minneapolis Truck Strike

4,000 Guardsmen Put in Control of City by Gov. Olson.

Peace Plan Stirs Employers' Ire

Mediators Are Spurned; Walkout Is Called Communist-Led.

Minneapolis, July 26 (AP).—Military rule clamped down on striking truck drivers and their employers today.

Gov. Floyd B. Olson placed 4,000 National Guardsmen in control of the city for preservation of law and order during the strike.

It was the first time in history that martial rule has been declared in Minnesota, the Governor resorting to this drastic step when employers, condemning what they said were "communistic leaders," failed to accept without reservations the peace plan ultimatum given both sides by Federal mediators.

Regulations covered by military rule were announced by Adjt. Gen. E. A. Walsh. For the most part, residents of the city were unaffected by the orders, which prohibited movement of commercial trucks except necessities, unless by official permit, and forbade outdoor gatherings of more than 100 persons unless officially permitted.

Civil Courts to Function.

City and county law enforcement authorities were subordinated to military. Civil courts will function as usual. Vehicles moving in interstate commerce will be allowed to operate.

Troops in full equipment began moving into the city in force to prevent any such further outbreak of violence in which one man was fatally wounded and 67 others hurt, most of them shot, when police fired on strikers attacking a loaded truck last Friday.

Gov. Olson proclaimed martial rule soon after word was received of the vote on the controversy by both sides, which had studied the terms of settlement drafted by the Rev. Francis Haas and E. H. Dunnigan, Federal mediators.

The employers rejected the wage scale provision, stipulating 42½ cents an hour for inside workers, helpers and platform men and 52½ cents an hour for drivers. The employes, on the other hand, cheered the vote of their union, No. 574, when it balloted 1,866 to 147 to accept the mediators' plan in full and without reservations.

Governor Answers Criticism.

Before the employers had disclosed their stand, the Governor had issued a reply to their cirticism of his threat of martial rule, made yesterday.

He branded the Citizens Alliance "a small clique of men who hate all organized labor and are determined to crush it," adding:

"I do not agree with you that the plea for a living wage by a family man receiving only $12 a week is answered by calling that man a Communist." He promised an investigation into last Friday's outbreak.

Simultaneously, Chief of Police Michael Johannes announced two men he said were James P. Cannon, editor of the Militant, New York Communist publication, and Max Schachtman, editor of the New International, a publication, were in custody.

The police, the chief said, also seized papers in their possession which showed a connection between Communists and the Minneapolis strike.

Cattle Trading Again Halted

Next Move for Peace in Chicago Yards Up to Employers.

Chicago, July 26 (AP).—Buying and selling at the Chicago stockyards came to a standstill today, as the management debated steps toward a settlement of the handlers' strike.

The cowboys who quit their posts Monday have agreed to resume their tasks if a certain group of employes is granted wage increases and minimum hours are established for all. Yesterday they agreed to a clean-up of the glut of live stock created by the first day's cessation of activities, but today transactions were halted again.

The next move toward reopening the market was up to the employers. Meanwhile, pressure was brought to bear from several sources to end the dispute and lift the embargo on live-stock shipments to the great market.

Conciliators from the Labor Department and officials of the Chicago Regional Labor Board sought to bring peace to the industry. Lloyd Garrison, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board at Washington, declared his intentions of dispatching representatives to the scene if the situation fails to improve.

Town's Lettuce Boom Revives Days of '29

$24,500 for One 140-Acre Crop Just Another Deal to Salinas, Calif.; Cash Registers Clink Merrily.

Following is one of a series of economic-political stories by Raymond Clapper, of The Post's National News Bureau, who was sent West to study the situation at first hand.

By Raymond Clapper.

Salinas, Calif., July 26.—It doesn't seem possible, after hearing nothing but woe from the farm belt for 15 years, but there's an agricultural boom on here in the Salinas-Watsonville alley—a lettuce boom. Vitamins are making farmers rich.

It's like the tales out of Wall street in 1929, when elevator boys and stenographers were making riches in the market. Here in this little Spanish-type California town they're getting rich out of letteuce—and without a penny's worth of help from AAA.

They've done it themselves, aided by favorable market conditions, to which have been applied some Yankee horse sense. At the height of the crop season $100,000 a day in cash comes into the town. Since the first of the year approximately $5,000,000 in good United States cash has been laid down on the barrel head in Salinas, Monterey County, population $12,000, for lettuce—plain, ordinary Iceberg type head lettuce—the kind they serve with all dishes in the lettuce leaf tea rooms back East.

"It's green gold," says E. L. Sherman, publisher of the Salinas Index-Journal. "Sure, it's a gamble, but this year we're winning and we're doing it ourselves, without help from Washington. We have had a break because of the late season in the East, and our lettuce men have had sense enough to get together and market their lettuce through a central agency. We know every morning where every car of lettuce is and how much there is at every consuming center. We know just how much lettuce Baltimore, or Washington, or Lincoln, Nebr., is likely to eat in a week and, if we see they have enough headed in their direction to supply their needs, we don't let any more cars go through. We divert them to some

11 a. m.	85	3 p. m.	92
Noon	88	4 p. m.	90
1 p. m.	89	5 p. m.	89

Sudden, driving rains and cooling breezes yesterday ended the heat wave which for a week has baked the Nation and caused the deaths of 1,350 persons.

An abrupt leveling off in the number of deaths accompanied generally, cooler temperatures which were reported from all sections of the country.

Washington's maximum was 92, reported at 3 p. m., but nigh humidity made citizens perspire and suffer throughout the day. Scattered thundershowers and lower temperture were predicted by the Weather Bureau for tomorrow. Gentle northerly winds will bring relief to the city. Two prostrations were reported to police here.

Slight Relief to Farm Lands.

While moisture afforded some temporary relief to parched lands, crop experts asserted much additional rain must fall to afford any permanent benefits to the Nation's grazing and farming lands on the Great Plains and in the Middle West. The Associated Press reported them as stating that in numerous sections the crops were a total loss, and no amount of rain could help them.

The Missouri corn crop this year does not exceed 40,000,000 bushels, due to the tremendous drought and heat, a report by E. A. Logan, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, revealed yesterday. The previous estimate, as of July 10, placed the crop at 89,000,000 bushels. Kansas figures, the Associated Press said, were 25,000,000 bushels, against 48,000,000 bushels on July 1.

A joint Federal and State agricultural report for Minnesota placed crop conditions there at from 30 to 70 per cent normal, with hay at the lower extreme, winter wheat at 32 per cent and spring wheat at 45 per cent.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, grain prices were lower, but market experts referred to the irreparable damage to crops, which they con-

Greif Defies NRA; Will Use Blue Eagle

Has Thousands of Labels on Hand; Company Charges "Trickery."

Baltimore, July 26 (AP).—L. Greif & Brother, the country's second largest manufacturer of men's clothing, which yesterday was ordered deprived of the NRA Blue Eagle, tonight reported through its attorney that it has many thousands of NRA labels on hand and will continue to use them "in defiance" of the order from Washington.

The company's supply, reported to be in excess of 75,000, is sufficient to label all clothes Greif can manufacture between now and the middle of September, said Leonard Weinberg, Greif attorney.

"And by that time I think we will be able to get this case heard by a United States court," Weinberg declared.

Early this week the Greif concern secured from the United States District Court an order temporarily restraining NRA authorities in Maryland and the district attorney here "from directly or indirectly suspending or revoking the continued use by L. Greif & Bro., Inc., of NRA labels and/or the Blue Eagle."

But at the same time, Judge William C. Coleman dismissed the petition to restrain Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and the NRA authorities in Washington because, the judge said, they were without the jurisdiction of the district court.

The fact that the NRA authorities took advantage of the jurisdictional lines today caused Weinberg to accuse them of "artifice, subterfuge and trickery."

"The NRA is attempting to do, indirectly, the very thing that the

Battleship Rams Boat; Two Drown

Seattle, July 26 (AP).—The 34,600-ton battleship Arizona rammed the 12-ton fishing boat Umatilla in fog and darkness off Cape Flattery early today, drowning two men on the little purse seiner. The seven other crew members were saved.

The victims were John Resarak and Lou Halson. Capt. Lucas Planich, skipper of the Umatilla, was among those rescued.

Struck forward on the starboard side, the Umatilla sank almost immediately to the water's edge. The Arizona lowered boats, but could not find the purse seiner in the dark and fog. When daylight came, the Umatilla was sighted in tow of the Emblem, which beached the wreck.

Alleged Dillinger Aid Leaps 19 Floors to Death in Chicago

Samuel P. Cowley, acting chief of the Chicago bureau of the Department of Justice, had just questioned him concerning use of his home as a makeshift infirmary, where a plastic surgeon altered the features of Dillinger and Homer Van Meter.

Cowley and his assistants stepped from the room into their offices to devise a new series of queries. There was a crash of glass as the prisoner catapulted through a window high up in the building and hurtled to the alley below.

The Government men rushed back into the room and stared down at the crumpled heap below. The body narrowly missed a pedestrian, but no one witnessed the suicide and none of the throngs moving along Clark and La Salle streets saw the plunge.

Probasco, 67, dog and horse fancier and proprietor of a tavern, was seized by the Federal agents at his North Side home last night. Cowley said he had a record as a bootlegger and was reputed to have knowledge of veterinary practice acquired when he conducted a livery stable years ago.

He was taken to the bureau and quizzed regarding Dillinger and Van Meter. Cowley said he denied knowing the hoodlums. The acting chief announced he had evidence that the bandits submitted to the knife at the Probasco home and intimated the surgeon was known.

A neighbor said he believed a woman had figured in the raid on the home, but Government men declined to comment on rumors that Mrs. Anna Sage, "the woman in red" who was with Dillinger when he was slain by officers Sunday night, had accompanied them to the Probasco place.

Dakotas Balk At Vacating Arid Farms

People Ready "to Fight It Out," Declares Gov. Berry.

Pierre, S. Dak., July 26 (AP).—The Federal Reclamation Bureau's proposal for wholesale evacuation of drought regions got the cold shoulder today in the area it is designed to benefit.

The Washington statement of Dr. Elwood Mead, reclamation commissioner, that "tens of thousands of persons must be moved from the drought-striken western half of Dakotas and the eastern slope of Rocky Mountains" drew this response from Gov. Tom Berry, of South Dakota:

"In my opinion the spirit of the people of South Dakota is still loyal to the soil of the State, and investigations of drought-stricken families disclosed determination to fight it out."

The State executive, himself a resident of a western South Dakota ranch, said redistribution of the population within the State is contemplated under a rehabilitation program already planned, but he saw no need for moving any persons outside the State's borders.

Faith in Future Profits.

Even this intrastate policy of voluntary movement of farmers from unproductive land west of the Missouri River to small eastern South Dakota farms has its critics.

"There has been lots of money made in western South Dakota," said one West River rancher, "and there will be plenty made in the future."

Two North Dakota Agricultural College men and E. A. Willson, State administrator of Federal relief also joined the chorus of opposition.

"I wouldn't say we'd have to evacuate half of North Dakota any more than I'd say the world is coming to an end," Willson declared.

"Too Excited Now."

Asserting Dr. Mead is a "reclamation engineer" and therefore "thinks in terms of water," Dr. H. L. Walster, dean of the North Dakota Agricultural College, said:

"I think we are becoming too excited about this drought. The evidence of history is that it has been dry before * * *

"We must consider the droughts in terms of frequency. If in some sections they come too often then it will be safe to say these must be abandoned."

He counseled a system of land utilization.

Recalling 30 years, during which he has visited nearly every county in the State each year, Dr. E. F. Chandler, dean emeritus of the North Dakota University Engineering College and former State irrigation engineer, disagreed with Dr. Mead.

Low Costs Compensate.

"The farmers have always survived droughts in the past," he said. "Though North Dakota has been harder hit than many other States this year and in recent years, it must be remembered that the interest on the farmers' investment is

7 Die, Trapped Between Trains

Six Boys, Girl Killed; Only Survivor Is Hurt Critically.

Shelton, Conn., July 26 (AP).—Six boys and the sister of one of them were killed today when they were trapped betwen two trains of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. Another youth was injured critically.

The children were between 10 and 14 years old.

The fireman of one train, an eyewitness, said the children were playing on the tracks. There was another report, however, that they were returning from a nearby bathing pool and had lingered on the right of way.

The fireman, who said he believed the children were playing cards on the tracks, declared that upon hearing his train approach the children jumped in front of one coming in the opposite direction.

The girl died as she was moved up the hillside toward a vehicle. The boys died in the positions in which they had been tossed. One boy, Joseph Gentile, has a fractured skull and compound fractures of both legs.

The bodies remained on the ground until word was received to send them to a morgue for identification.

Woman Lost in Woods Found.

Greenville, Me., July 26 (AP).—Mrs. F. H. Crane, 55, of Cincinnati, Ohio, lost in the woods of Deer Island on Moosehead Lake last night, was found this morning by a searching party. Mrs. Crane suffered no ill effects.

300 Slain, Hundreds Shot As Civil War Grips Austria; Nazis Fall Before Loyalists

Italian Troops on the March Near Border

Aroused by the slaying of Austrian Chancellor Dollfuss, Premier Mussolini of Italy is moving troops like these nearer the Austrian border, prepared for intervention if he feels it is necessary to safeguard Austrian independence.

Rintelen Murdered in His Jail Cell, Cries Widow.

Developments last night in the Austrian situation were:

Vienna—Civil war in Styria and Carinthia Provinces took 300 lives with hostilities continuing. Prince von Starhemberg became head of government.

London—Great Britain, Italy and France ready to preserve Austrian integrity, but armed intervention believed unnecessary.

(Copyright, 1934, by The Associated Press.)

Vienna, July 26.—Nazis and government troops battled in a desperate civil war in the southern provinces tonight as the supporters of the slain chancellor, Engelbert Dollfuss, carried on his battle against the group that took his life.

With machine guns and artillery as well as small arms the government forces—regular army and Heimwehr—fought ruthlessly to dislodge Nazis from their strongholds, and men fell dead and wounded by the hundreds.

Reports of the number killed piled up until it appeared that at least 300 lives had been lost, and many rebels and loyal soldiers were maimed.

Troops Line Borders.

As Austria fought rebels within the borders, across two frontiers foreign soldiers stood in war-like accoutrements, watching the conflict.

On the Italian border, 48,000 soldiers of Premier Mussolini were ready to dash in to protect, if need be, the independence of Austria under the leadership of Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, standing in Dollfuss' stead.

Yugo-Slavian Troops across the border from the Provice of Carinthia watched closely the movements of Nazi Troops and government soldiers a few yards from them. One report said the Yugo-Slacians fired across the border into Austria.

This was not confirmed, but the situation was particularly tense there because of the danger that a battle betwen the Austrian forces would send bullets into Yugo-Slavia.

Many of the Nazis—form the farms of the Hinterlands—fought without knowledge that the government was still in the hands of the Fascists.

Rebels Lose Ground.

The government was not uniformly successful against the Nazis, although it appeared from reports reaching here that the rebels were losing ground.

In Styria first reports said 380 were dead, and other casualties were reported from various sectors.

Artillery was brought into action for the first time since the Socialist civil war in February as farmers in the Provinces of Styria and Carinthia mobilized in great numbers.

The City of Leoben was captured by the government forces with the aid of big guns. Loeben is a city of 10,000 population, and 27 persons were killed there. Styria reports said the dead included 180 Nazis and 100 gendarmes, with fighting continuing.

Police discovered plans for a Nazi mobilization, they said, in a house in Klagenfurt, and the revolt followed.

Storm Troops Called Out.

Nazi Storm Troops throughout Styria were called out in a general alarm.

Near the airport in Annabichel, a suburb of Klagenfurt, 200 Nazis armed with machine guns and wearing steel helmets were attacked by a mixed force of soldiers and members of the Heimwehr (Fascist Home Guard).

After a desperate battle, the outnumbered Nazies retreated, leaving behind 9 dead and 16 prisoners. The government forces also took two machine guns.

New Austrian Chief Pleases Allied Powers

Britain, France and Italy Believe Joint Action Unnecessary.

London, July 26 (AP).—Great Britain, France and Italy were represented in authoritative British quarters tonight as satisfied with the elevation of Prince Ernst von Starhemberg to the head of the Austrian government.

The three powers, which have undertaken to guarantee the integrity of Austria, it was stated, will abandon any thought of joint action in the Austro-German situation on the ground that the Nazis have done themselves more damage than could possibly be inflicted from any other quarter.

Nazi Danger Past.

The danger of Nazi control in Austria is definitely past, in the view of British authorities. It is now regarded as unlikely that Austria will make any protest to the League of Nations or to the powers against Germany in connection with the putsch and the killing of Chancellor Dollfuss.

"It is agreed that it is the wisest policy now to let the Nazis stew in their own juice," said one source close to the British government.

"They harmed themselves immeasurably by showing how weak they really are—much weaker than were the Socialists whom Dollfuss smashed last February, and by forcing an estrangement between Germany and Italy which may be expected to widen in the future."

Anti-German Action Unlikely.

It was said that even should it be established that the Germah government was involved in yesterday's putsch it was extremely unlikely that any action would be taken under the Versailles Treaty by which Germany was pledged not to interfere with Austria.

Another source charged that the seizure of the radio station in Vienna yesterday was a sign for a nation-wide Nazi uprising and that

Mrs. James Roosevelt Makes Debut on Radio

Paris, July 26 (AP).—Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, had her first experience at speaking over the radio at a luncheon given her today by the American Women's Club.

She spoke both in English and French, the latter with an excellent accent that surprised her hearers. Her subject was "My Son." She said she hoped he was listening in Honolulu.

Stock Price Break Starts U. S. Inquiry

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

As security prices on the New York Stock Exchange suffered the severest decline of the year, with shares receding from $1 to $10 a share, the Federal Security and Exchange Commission yesterday commenced a study of recent market operations to determine if any manipulative or improper influences had been exerted.

Ferdinand Pecora, the commissioner in charge of enforcing the prohibitions against manipulative practices, said he expected the New York Stock Exchange officials to make an investigation of the source of war rumors reported to have been circulated on the exchange floor as the selling of stocks got under way.

Aside from Mr. Pecora's remarks about the "war rumors," which he assailed as "unethical," the commission declined to comment on the break in security prices, except to let it be known that the situation was under scrutiny. It is doubted here that the break was the result of a bear raid.

Marketing Sense Used.

Officials appeared to concur in the opinion expressed in New York that the wave of selling resulted from a combination of circumstances set off by apprehension over the European situation following the assassination of Chancellor Englebert Dollfuss of Austria.

Among the circumstances cited were the intensity of the drought and a general weakening of security prices in recent days wing, in part, to sluggishness of summer business and to pessimism over the economic outlook in Wall street.

The decline in security prices during the last week, it was contended, had weakened marginal accounts to such an extent that, when rumors about Italian troops

48,000 Men Sent to Border By Mussolini

Germany Warned by Italy to Keep Hands Off in Austria.

Rome, July 26. (AP)—Premier Mussolini today sent 48,000 troops, fully equipped for war-time service, to the Austrian frontier.

A high foreign office official said the move constitutes an affirmation, directed at Germany, that Italy will not permit interference with the domestic affairs of Austria.

The troops—four divisions of 12,000 men each—moved into positions on the Brenner Pass and the Carinthian Pass from the nearest army posts. They are ready for rapid military action in case the situation demands it. The government stated that no further steps are likely to be taken, however, in view of the improved conditions in Austria.

The soldiers were ordered to mark time on the border and by no means to overstep the frontier except on orders from Mussolini himself.

Intervention May Not Come.

At Rome, where the premier refused himself to all interviewers except his immediate assistants in the army, navy and air ministries, it was emphasized officially that the troop movements do not mean that intervention is a certainty.

The government's official attitude is that Austria appears to be so well under control that outside military aid will not necessarily be needed.

The premier raced to Rome from Riccione, arriving early in the afternoon after making an average of 50 miles an hour in his trim roadster over the winding concrete highway from the sea resort.

He then plunged into a round of conferences, following his policy of directing all matters of prime importance himself. His Venezia palace soon became the headquarters for the armed forces of the nation.

Thousands Acclaim Roosevelt As Houston Reaches Honolulu

Honolulu, July 26 (AP).—President Roosevelt came ashore here at 9:15 a. m. today and was greeted by officials of the Army and Navy. The Hawaiian Band serenaded him. He departed at once on a motor tour of Oahu Island.

Strains of the familiar "Aloha" formed a background for the colorful scene at the President's landing. Thirty thousand persons jammed the pier. Across the harbor a 21-gun Presidential salute echoed from Fort Armstrong.

On time to the minute the cruiser Houston, with Mr. Roosevelt aboard, nosed through the narrow channel into the harbor.

Many races overflowed standing room on the pier and into the streets along the President's route around the island.

His sons, Franklin, jr., and John, and naval officers stood near the No. 2 turret, with the President as the Houston moored. The Houston, followed by her convoy, the cruiser New Orleans, was escorted to the harbor mouth by a hundred flag-decorated Japanese fishing sampans and by a dozen outrigger canoes with Hawaiian paddlers.

President Roosevelt was greeted by Territorial Gov. Joseph B. Poindexter and Army and Navy officials, who hung about the Executive's shoulders leis of red carnation and white pikiki. The President descended the gangway and stood at attention as the Marine Band played "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The President entered a touring car with his two sons and Gov. Poindexter and was whisked away.

Police officials estimated more than 100,000 persons, including whites, Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos and Hawaiians cheered and waved to the first President ever to visit the Territory.

Desperate Battle Rages.

A desperate machine gun battle was under way at Feldkirchen Ossiachersee near Villach and Woldgang.

The fighting was still under way at 10:30 p. m. throughout the Syrian and Carinthian regions.

During the afternoon it had appeared that the government was in a good position to control the situation, although the Nazis admittedly held some towns in the southern provinces.

One of these towns, Ratgersburg, on the Yugoslavian border, fell without a struggle as government troops moved in.

Call to Colors Sounded.

Fighting continued, meanwhile, in other sections, and the number of government men killed in the battle lines between Donawitz and Aussee was estimated at 15. Earlier reports told of 14 other deaths among troops and of a large number of Nazis killed and wounded.

An appeal went out in the Tyrol for all able-bodied former officers and soldiers to be ready to answer a call to the colors.

The name of Dr. Rintelen was added by his wife to those killed.

Dr. Rintelen, Minister to Rome, and for years a prominent figure in Austrian politics, was said by his wife to have been fatally shot in the jail cell to which he was taken because his name was connected with yesterday's putsch.

Rintelen Slain, Says Wife.

While the government press bureau denied Rintelen was dead, other quarters said he had committed suicide. His wife said he was "murdered," and that he died in a hospital after writing a note saying "I am innocent."

Rintelen's son-in-law, Dr. Erich Rejekowitch, was arrested this afternoon at Graz, and Walter Petweidic, editor in chief of the Vienna Neuster Nachrichten, was taken into custody here by three Heimwehr officers.

Prince von Starhemberg rushed back from Vienna and took charge of the government. He stepped from the vice chancellorship to the position left vacant by the Nazi bullets which killed his diminutive but courageous chief.

Von Starhemberg, after relieving Kurt Schusschnigg, named to act temporarily as head of the government, called the cabinet in the heavily guarded, mourning-draped government building to begin the work of reconstruction.

Court to Try Raiders.

As a gesture of respect, the first act of the cabinet, despite the critical situation at home and abroad, was to provide for the financial future of Frau Dollfuss and her two young children.

Then attention was given to the 144 Nazis who held the chancellery while Dollfuss was killed and whose guarantee of safe conduct to Germany was revoked when it was learned what had been done.

A special military court of four officers will try these men and others involved in the uprising. Among the persons arrested was a close friend of Rintelen, Gen. Wagner, of the army. There was a report he had taken his own life after being seized at Graz.

The German government withdrew its minister, Kurt Rieth, because without authority he helped arrange for the safe transit to Germany of Dollfuss' killers.

Official Attacks Germany.

Despite the friendly attitude in Germany, Col. Adam, federal propaganda chief of Austria, in a radio speech tonight attacked the German official broadcasting system, accusing it of spreading false information and "heaping calumny on one who aleady was lying on his bier, a dead man."

"Never before have Germans fought against Germans in such a manner, and with such perfidious means," he said.

Adam took up item by item the broadcasts in Germany, beginning with the report at 2:15 yesterday that not National Socialists but Heimwehrmen had made the putsch against the chancellery and the Austrian radio station.

He took exception to the German radio report that in killing Dollfuss the Austrian people had turned against their tormentors.

At a press conference, the head of the Federal Press Bureau referred directly to an alleged German connection with the putsch, saying the German minister requested that an attache of the German Legation accompany the "putschers" to the border.

All Could be Hanged.

The Von Starhemberg government made it quite clear that stern measures will be taken against the 144 men involved in the attack on the chancellery.

All could be hanged under Austrian law, and if any are, it will mark the first execution of Nazis.

Dollfuss' death followed within 17 hours the hanging of a Socialist, the first person to lose his life on a charge of terrorism.

Frau Dollfuss, who yesterday was waiting happily with her children for her husband to join her and the family of Premier Mussolini in a vacation at Riccione, Italy, returned to the city, where black flags everywhere gave testimony of the tragedy which had come to her.

She went to the chancellery, where her husband's body lay in state, guarded by soldiers in the building where he had worked and where, although a devout Catholic, he had been denied the rites of the church as life ebbed away.

The grief-stricken widow asked the soldiers to leave her alone with the body, and she stood for several minutes beside it after they had left the room.

Tragedy Is Keynote.

Throughout Vienna, the spirit of tragedy prevailed. Many buildings exposed black flags, and faces of citizens were drawn and worried as they made their way through streets, patrolled by steel-helmeted police, Heimwehrmen and soldiers.

Placards proclaiming that the capital is under martial law were posted prominently. The whole city had the appearance of being under the domination of an army of occupation from a foreign land.

The quietest section of Vienna was Floridsdorf, Socialist stronghold, where guns and cannon blazed during the civil war last February. Few people were about, and there were few banners of mourning for the man who ruthlessly suppressed the Socialist uprising.

Dollfuss Rites Tomorrow.

Arrangements were being made in the midst of disturbances and uncertainty to hold funeral services for Dollfuss Saturdaty.

One report said Premier Mussolini of Italy would come here to attend the last rites for the man who was his personal friend as well as being close to him politically.

Dollfuss was a friend of the head of the church to which he was so deeply devoted, and had received a high decoration from him.

The elevation of Von Starhemberg, who rose to Vice Chancellor May 1 after supporting Dollfuss with his Heimwehr organization, gives Austria for the first time a dyed-in-the-wool Fascist chief of government.

Dollfuss, while practicing Fascist principles, came into office first as a Christian Socialist and at one time was in danger of losing the support of the Heimwehr.

Prince Is New Chief.

The Prince was not immediately named Chancellor, but it was believed he would be given the formal appointment shortly.

Apparently all the government under Schuschnigg did was to transfer the top place to the young aristocrat.

The position of Emil Fey, captured with Dollfuss when the chancellery was seized, was not changed today. He remained minister without portfolio, to which he dropped after being vice chancellor under Dollfuss.

It was Fey who, guarded by Nazi putschists, carried on negotiations from the chancellery balcony for release of the prisoners and safe conduct for the Nazis.

Border Crossing Denied.

Rumors that Italian troops had crossed the border persisted so strongly during the day that the foreign office here issued an official denial.

The reports regarding Yugoslavian soldiers firing into Austria received no confirmation and there was no official statement, although they were coupled with a statement that Austrian troops were being concentrated in the area.

At Innsbruck, scene of much Nazi terrorism, the local government called a special session to express its sorrow for the death of Dollfuss and pledge its support to the government.

The object of the Nazi putsch appeared to have been to establish a government in which Rintelen, a colorful figure in Austrian public life, would have an important part.

Although friendly to the Nazis, he was on good enough terms with their enemies to be Minister to Rome under Dollfuss.

"We agreed on Rintelen," said Fey at one time in his negotiations from the balcony.

"My husband did not commit suicide," said Frau Dintelen. "Why did he write the note saying 'I am innocent?'"

The note was written after he was taken to the hospital from the cell where he was wounded.

East Still Suffers.

On the Pacific Coast residents were not affected during the current spell, and temperatures continued balmy in the Far West yesterday. Most sections of the Atlantic Coast failed to receive any decided relief and in many cities, including Washington, the weather continued uncomfortably hot and humid.

Missouri, Illinois and Ohio continued to lead the States in the heat wave death toll, the Associated Press recorded, with 378, 348 and 159, respectively.

Other State totals were Iowa, 72; Nebraska, 60; Indiana, 59; Kentucky, 52; Kansas, 39; Minnesota, 33; Michigan, 23; Pennsylvania, 20; Wisconsin, 15; Texas, 13; West Virginia, 12; Oklahoma, 12; New York, 11; Arkansas, 9; South Dakota, 7; Tennessee, 7; Connecticut, 4; Massachusetts, 3; Alabama, 3; Maryland, 3; Rhode Island, 3; the District, 3; South Carolina, 1, and Virginia, 1.

In Washington, Melvin Thrift, 28, of the 200 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest, was overcome by the heat in front of Fine Engine Company No. 5. He was given first aid at the fire house and sent to Emergency Hospital.

Gerald Turner, 34, Alexandria, Va., was overcome while at work in the Georgetown Asphalt Plant. He was treated at Georgetown University Hospital.

Germany Held Responsible for Austrian Putsch

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Boldly blaming "German influence" for a share of responsibility in the assassination of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, Austrian Minister to the United States Edgar L. Prochnik predicted here yesterday that the iron fist of Prince Ernest von Starhemberg would crush Nazism in Austria.

Radio broadcasts from Munich and other stations in Germany time after time have threatened the death of the little chancellor, the minister declared, thus fostering a sentiment across the border that culminated in Wednesday's putsch.

The minister, in unusually plain-spoken language, was referring to the drive in Germany for the "Nazification" of Austria, which has been the subject of numerous protests by the Dollfuss regime. Almost daily, he said, the broadcasts have preached insurrection.

Predicts Nazis' Doom.

Asserting that the assassination will doom the Austrian Nazis' Herr Prochnik declared that Prince von Starhemberg, as Dullfuss' "strong man," might be expected to suppress them by much more ruthless tactics than the slain Chancellor cared to adopt.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt turned from his inspection of military defense in the Far Pacific to cable Austria, and hence to inform the world of his "horror and deep regret." Secretary of State Cordall Hull added that he was grieved "beyond expression."

The Austrian Minister, a veteran of the foreign service, whose deep friendship for the slain Chancellor was obvious in his speech, was careful no to blame the German government for inspiring the ill-fated putsch. Nor did he charge that the coup had been deliberately planned across the border.

German "Influences" Blamed.

But he did contend, in unmistakable terms, that "influences from Germany" had a great deal to do with the assassination. Further, he thought a wave of public indignation would help Prince von Starhemberg in what he regarded as an inevitable counter-drive against the Nazis as a party.

"There is hardly a country," he said, "that will not regret the chancellors death, as he stood for those policies which would maintain European peace. As the world knows, Austria is the point of gravity for European peace and therefore for world peace."

Discussing Prince von Starhemberg, Herr Prochnik pointed out that he created "on his own initiative and with his own money," the Heimwehr, or Fascist Guard, which is bitterly opposed to Nazism. He considered the situation well in hand; also that Prince von Starhemberg will receive the moral backing of Premier Mussolini.

The fact that Prince von Starhemberg might take more drastic action than the milder Dollfuss who, the iMnister said, always strove for peace, was seen as a source of possible danger by arousing Germany. Thus far the Hitler government has exhibited considerable anxiety to avoid any connection with the assassination.

Roosevelt Sends Cable.

The President's expression of sympathy was cabled to "His Excellency, Wilhelm Miklas, President of the Confederation of Austria, Vienna, Austria." It said:

"It is with horror and deep regret that I learn of the assassination of Egelbert Dollfuss, minister of foreign affairs and chancellor of Austria. I extend through you to the Austrian people sincere sympathy in my own name and on behalf of my fellow countrymen.

"Mrs. Roosevelt joins with me in expressing to Mme. Dollfuss our deepest sympathy in this great sorrow which has come to her."

Secretary Hull's cable, addressed only to "the acting chancellor," naming no one, added:

"The sad intelligence of the death of Chancellor Dollfuss at the hand of an assassin shocks and grieves me beyond expression. My fellow citizens join with me in extending to the government and people of Austria sincerest sympathy in their sorrow."

StateOfficialsSilent.

But for these two announcements, which are out of the ordinary only in so far as they reflect the attitude of this Goverment toward the attempted Nazi coup, the State Department maintained a tight silence, hepeful that the threatening war clouds have blown over.

No effort was made to conceal official anxiety over the latest flare-up in the powder box that is the Balkans; but for the most part opinion was united in the belief that, while potentially dangerous, in the immediate situation hardly appears the seed of another European war.

Officials were inclined to agree with the Austrian Minister that the situation, under Prince von Starhemberg, will be kept under control; that Premier Mussolini will lend every support to the present regime, and that troops massed at the Iealian border will not mean an armed intervention.

Ironically, the Austrian putsch startled European capitals at the very time President Roosevelt was arriving at Hawaii for an inspection of America's military outpost on the other side of the world. Latest developments were being flashed to him by radio but all were agreed the United States is not immediately involved.

Envoy Sends in Report.

As diplomatic reports flooded into embassies here, the State Department revealed only that George S. Messersmith, American Minister to Austria, had succeeded in getting through a report early yesterday. It said Vienna appeared quiet Wednesday night after the reign of terror.

So far no Americans have been caught in the maelstrom of Austrian events and official Washington breathed another sigh of relief that Messersmith, a highly regarded foreign service officer, is in charge at Vienna. He was transferred there only a few months ago after serving as consul general at Berlin.

Aside from the statement that this Government has not been approached by any other power for cooperation in the Austrian dilema, Secretary Hull declined to comment at his regular press conference.

The assassination was the only subject of conversation at the embassies, of course, but comment was wary. The Italian Embassy said the only dispatch it has received revealed the putsch as a terrorist plot and not a revolution. The German Embassy, whose ambassador is away in Europe, was silent.

Two important aftermaths of the war scare were seen: The cooling of Mussolini toward Germany for the killing of his friend Dollfuss, and the chilling of hopes for the naval conference scheduled next year. Observers were fearful the Austrian flare-up will dispell what little chance for disarmament that remained.

Mussolini Promises Liberty for Austria

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Rome, July 26.—Premier Benito Mussolini telegraphed Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, vice chancellor, in Vienna tonight that "the independence of Austria will be defended by Italy."

"The tragic end of Chancellor Dollfuss deeply grieves me," Mussolini's message added. "I was bound to him by relations of personal friendship and common political views. I always admired his virtues as a statesman, his upright simplicity and his great courage.

"The independence of Austria, for which he fell, is the principle that has been and will be defended by Italy, even more strenuously in times of exceptional difficulty. Chancellor Dollfuss served the common people, from whom he came, with absolute disinterest and defiance of peril.

"His memory will be honored not only in Austria, but everywhere in the civilized world, which already has struck with its moral condemnation those responsible for his death, both near and distant.

"Please accept this expression of my sympathy, which interprets the unanimous feeling of grief, condemnation and regret of the Italian people. MUSSOLINI."

King George 'Horrified' At Murder of Dollfuss

London, July 26 (AP).—King George was horrified at the "dastardly murder" of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, he said in a telegram tonight to President Miklas of Austria. The message stated:

"It is with horror that I have learned of the dastardly murder of federal Chancellor Dr. Dollfuss, and I hasten to convey to you, M. le President, my profound sympathy with you and the Austrian nation at this tragic moment. Pray also convey to Frau Dollfuss on behalf of the Queen and myself our heartfelt condolences.

"Signed, George R. I."

Lettuce Boom Brings in Cash To Coast Town

smaller locality. We call it 'fanning them out.'"

It means cash money here. Earl Wilson, former inspector for the United States Department of Agriculture, is feeling flush. A few weeks ago he sold his lettuce. He sold it "as is," just as it was growing on his two ranches.

"I got $175 an acre for 140 acres," he said. "But the price slipped off and a few days ago I sold another 50 acres. I got only $150 an acre for it. But I'm not complaining. When I think of those farmers in Iowa and Nebraska, I think we are all pretty lucky out here."

$24,500 for One Crop.

Rather. For one ranch of 140 acres he took in $24,500 cash for one crop—and lettuce out here is good for two crops, and sometimes three a year. For his other 50 acres, Mr. Wilson took in $7,500.

Everybody around here knows Bruce Church. He used to work in a real estate office for $100 a month. He decided to go into lettuce and found a partner with $4,000. This year Bruce Church has cashed in lettuce heads to the value of $150,000.

"You'se got to remember," Wilson warned, "that about half the people who go into lettuce go broke. I have to pay 17 cents for each of the crates I use and 4 cents for the waterproof paper that goes into each crate. I have to pay cash for my icing. But I'm getting by."

Ellis Spiegl also is getting by. After a good spring season he flew to the Baer fight and won $15,000, which was just extra change for a party. The legend is that he took in $150,000 from lettuce.

Town Is Booming.

All this cash money has created boom time conditions here. Haircuts are 75 cents, and other prices are up in proportion. The Cadillac dealer is doing the largest motor business in town. Del Monte, the famous resort less than 20 miles away, has become the playground of Salinas, which was once its poor neighbor. Gambling is prohibited here, but still the boys gather around in the cool of the evening, and tall tales are told of what goes on. One well known business man here dropped $16,000 in a crap game the other night. It takes nerve and the gambling instinct to go into lettuce, and the habit carries over after the day's profits have been gathered in.

How has this all come about? First there is the climate. Salinas lettuce goes on the market early in April. During the summer months this community markets 80 per cent of the lettuce supply of the country. Throughout October it has a complete monopoly of head lettuce throughout the country. At other times it has competition from Arizona, Washington State, the Imperial Valley and New York. But this year late freezes in the East and poor growing weather removed some competition. The season here was early and ideal for fast growing. Farmers are due to get three crops—Earl Wilson's $175 an acre sale of his lettuce was for one crop. He hopes to get at least $150 for his second.

Beard Plan Is Big Aid.

Another reason for the boom this year is Sam N. Beard. Growers and shippers here never meet without talking about the Beard plan. On April 2, as the spring deal began, Beard, for years a producer broker in this section, opened his growers' exchange. It occupies two rooms in a small office building. Each shipper—and most of the 65 shippers of lettuce in this section have signed up—agrees to pay him 1 cent a crate for all lettuce packed, whether it is sold or not. For this charge, Beard routes the lettuce. His strategy has been to eliminate the piling up of lettuce in terminal markets—to eliminate "rollers" or unsold lettuce in transit.

Under the old practice a broker in St. Louis or Baltimore would wire several shippers to send on cars of lettuce at the usual terms. The result was that a city which could consume only two cars of lettuce in a week would have five or six cars in the yards. This beat down the price and the Salinas shippers had to take what they could get. Under the Beard plan, telegraphic check is kept of all cars. Every morning, with the aid of Department of Agriculture market reports, charts are compiled showing how much lettuce is standing in some 173 consuming markets throughout the country. Buyers at the other end are not permitted to pile up shipments contingent on sale. They are offered by telegraph cars of given grade at certain prices. The deal is bargained out and the money wired here.

When Beard started operating the central traffic bureau in April, lettuce was bringing under $2 a crate cash here. In May it averaged $4 a crate. Anything over $1.35 a crate is profit. The average cash price here in April was $2.10 a crate. In May it was $3.31. In June it was $2.06. Such prices were unheard of.

Shipments Are Suspended.

Money came so easy from the spring crop that the summer crop now coming in was exceptionally heavy. The price began to slip a couple of weeks ago. It slid down to $1. By July 16 it was 85 cents. No profit in that. Shippers suspended shipments. For five days not one single crate of lettuce went out of Salinas, whereas normal shipments had been running 100 to 125 carloads a day. They were holding back for at least $1.25 a crate.

"Our boys are all standing together," one of the shippers said. "Some of them began to weaken and wanted to start shipping, but after we got through talking with them they stiffened up again. They are standing 100 per cent now."

The significant thing about this is that the lettuce growers in this district have pitched in themselves to work out their own problems without help from Washington, says A. A. Tavernetti, Monterey County head of the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of California.

"Last spring conditions looked bad, and there was talk of proration among the lettuce growers," he said. "Conferences were held looking to a request to the State to step in and fix restrictions on growers. But the shippers couldn't agree, so the plan was dropped. Then Sam Beard came in and sold his idea to the shippers, and, as it turned out, they made a killing as a result of unfavorable conditions elsewhere which helped this market."

Farmers Quick to Diversify.

Although this is a boom season here, Tavernetti says farmers in this region have suffered little through the depression, because they have been quick to diversify and shift crops to meet conditions.

"Fifty years ago this was a cattle country," he said. "Then it went into wheat. Rust ruined this crop, and the farmers shifted to barley. That was not profitable, and soon they went into potatoes. The Salinas Burbank potato became a household word throughout the Nation. Disease undermined potatoes, and then farmers turned to beans and other vegetables. About ten years ago they began going heavily into lettuce. This year we have shipped 11,000 carloads of lettuce. But if the lettuce market goes bad, we can swing back to any of these crops we have grown out here."

Stories told by responsible residents are hard to believe. In 1927, at the height of an earlier lettuce boom, one farmer near Watsonville, near here, sold his lettuce on the ground for $1,300 an acre, the buyer to cut, pack and ship it. That represented only one out of two or possibly three crops of the season.

This was an exceptional price, but it is not uncommon to sell a crop on the field for $325 an acre, and a sale at $250 an acre has been just a part of the day's routine. The average cost to the farmer for raising this lettuce is about $65 an acre, agricultural experts figure, and rarely runs more than $100 an acre.

Farmers not in lettuce have done well. One 80-acre ranch near Salinas, planted in various vegetables, has netted $4,000 to $7,000 a year throughout the depression.

Farmers here naturally take a rather superior view of the control plans of AAA. Some wheat is grown in this region. The county agent here showed The Post correspondent some of his files. There was one farmer near San Miguel, Calif., who had leased five ranches and had to sign contracts with AAA for each ranch.

We went over the papers and counted up the signatures. There were exactly 226 signatures on the contracts with AAA. The proofs of compliance with acreage reduction pledges carried 165 signatures, including those of witnesses who swore that the farmer had reduced his acreage as promised. There were 21 signatures on the proofs of joint compliance. In all, this farmer's papers for his 1934 wheat crop bore 411 signatures. Local committees spend most of their time taking signatures and have no time to investigate. Here they contrast such complicated paper routine with the simple man-to-man arrangements in lettuce, where deals involving $25,000 are made between farmers and shippers without the signing of a single slip of paper.

Land Still Reasonable.

One of the curious facts about the situation is that this boom in "green gold" has not produced inflation of land prices. First-class land can be had at $350 an acre. Improved land runs $500 to $600 an acre. One reason is that the easy money in lettuce is regarded as a gamble and not—as was the case with Midwest farmers during the war-time wheat boom—as a permanent thing. This is the first killing that has been made in three years in lettuce. Farmers and buyers of land have retained their sense of proportion.

Endless ramifications of the lettuce activity are noted. There is the lively "shook" business—shooks are the crates which are delivered knocked down. More ice is produced in the little city of Salinas—for packing lettuce—than in the large cities of San Francisco and Oakland combined.

When local business men held their weekly luncheon of the Exchange Club at Santa Lucia Inn this week, they heard a speech by a fellow townsman who had just been back to Iowa. He was not an orator, but he described the burned-up fields, the famine of water and the desperate plight of Middle Western farmers in a few rough but graphic sentences.

"Every time I think of it I thank God how lucky we are out here," he said, and well he should.

lower in this State than farther west."

He is convinced, he said, that "by diversification and by cultivating only the land suitable for dry farming, all of North Dakota can still be profitable farming area."

Some believed the drought is only temporary, and an extensive population movement would cripple the territory.

court has already restrained it from doing," he declared. "Time and time again, when the NRA has needed the courts to assist it in enforcing the recovery act against private citizens, it has not hesitated to invoke their aid. But now, when the same court is applied to for construction of that law by a citizen, the Government resorts to evasion, persecution and intimidation, to render the court impotent and to prevent the citizen from obtaining a decision.

"How can it ask the respect of its citizens when it has no self-respect?"

$100,000 Wages in Dispute.

The Greif case grew out of the Men's Clothing Code Authority order that the company pay certain of its skilled employes an excess over the code minimum and that it also pay these employes more than $100,000 the authority considered due in back wages. So far the NRA has not denied the Greif contention that all its employes get as much as $14.40 a week, the code minimum, and that the majority get more. However, many of the skilled workers in the company's 11 plants in Maryland, Pennsylvania and Tennessee do not get as much as the code authority ordered.

The company does not contend that the Government can not require the payment of a living wage, said Weinberg. But it does contend that the NRA has no authority to fix wages of various classes of employes.

France to Support Austrian Freedom

Paris, July 26. (A. P.)—France stands ready to help Italy preserve the independence of Austria, officials emphasized today. Predictions were made that closer cooperation between the two countries would be one result of the thwarted Nazi putsch in Vienna.

Premier Doumergue and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou, in their messages of condolence on the death at the hands of Nazi assassins of Chancellor Dollfuss, indicated clearly where France stands.

The Foreign Office officially took a calm view of the matter, and it was understood that allies of France whose borders touch Austria were advised not to send troops to the frontier for fear the trouble might be aggravated by such action.

Doumergue's message praised Dollfuss for his fight to maintain Austria's independence "to which France is firmly attached."

Kuehling Rites Held at Miami

Miami, Fla., July 26 (AP).—The last scene in the puzzling double drowning here recently of Roy H. Kuehling, 42, of Washington, and Mrs. E. Frank Faircloth, 52, came today with private burial services for the man.

Funeral home attendants said that as far they could determine there were no erlatives of Kuehling, branded by the coroner as a murderer and suicide, present as the body was lowered into the grave.

The bodies of Kuehling, who was questioned by Wasington authorities in the drowning of his first wife and sentenced to prison for the wounding of his second several years ago, and Mrs. Faircloth were found July 14 on a rocky beach here.

The county physician reported both died by drowning, and Peace Justice Henry L. Oppenborn officially reported Kuehling drowned the woman and then waded out into Biscayne Bay and similarly ended his own life.

The body of rMs. Faircloth was buried in Jacksonville.

Stock Market Price Decline Starts Inquiry

entering Austria were circulated, the drop in prices brought an avalanche of sales through forced liquidation. Sales for the day totaled 3,340,000 shares, the largest volume since February 9.

At the close of the day, tabulators revealed that the prices of 786 securities had declined, with 412 reaching new lows for the year. Forty-one issues showed price gains. The Dow Jones industrial average was computed at 86.51, a drop of 6.06 from Wednesday and a new low since October 20, last. The average for railroad issues was given by Dow Jones as 34.29, a loss of 3.30 and new low since October 21, last, while that agency averaged utility securities at 19.60, off 1.30, the lowest since April 3.

During the first hour on the New York exchange, prices were irregular but trading was dull. As rumors spread through Wall street, however, that Italian troops were crossing the Austrian border—news which might indicate the beginning of a European war—the selling started in volume.

"Blue Chip" Stocks Hit.

The so-called "blue chip" stocks were affected along with the others. Railroad, tobacco, automobile, chemical, metal and utility stocks went down in the face of the selling. Meanwhile, investment trusts were reported making large, but discriminating, purchases, at depressed prices. For a short time, the market quieted down but selling started again. Prices at the end of the day were among the lowest recorded for the session.

Meanwhile, the commodity markets also declined, but not to the extent of the security list. Wheat and corn at Chicago receded between 1 and 3 cents a bushel at the close. Cotton prices ended the day between 20 to 35 cents a bale down.

The bond market also registered its sharpest decline since March, with secondary issues losing from 1 to 6 points. Foreign bonds, particularly those with issuers in the possible war theater, suffered the heaviest losses. All issues of the United States Government yielded. Treasury bonds with the lower interest rates broke slightly more than 1 point. The dollar in foreign exchange was strong.

The rumor that the Italians had entered Austria may have been maliciously spread in order to create a recession in stock prices. On the other hand, it was pointed out here, it may have resulted from a misunderstanding of authentic reports that the Italians were concentrating 48,000 men along the Austrian border.

Assurances From Rome.

Assurances came from Rome after the "war rumors" spread that Benito Mussolini had no intention of sending troops into Austria at this time and that the concentration was a precautionary measure which was regarded as sufficient.

There is nothing in the stock-market control act dealing with the spread of false rumors to affect security prices—aside from misrepresentation of the merits of securities themselves—but Mr. Pecora said the law gave the commission authority to make any kind of an investigation of developments on security exchanges it believed necessary.

Mr. Pecora pointed out that the New York exchange had adequate authority to punish any of its members found guilty of starting false rumors or if their employes started such rumors. He also pointed to the New York law which makes it a felony to disseminate false market intelligence.

As a result of the declaration of Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy of the commission yesterday that the agency wished to eliminate "shoe-string speculation" in securities, it was reported that the Federal Reserve Board had under consideration a regulation forbidding marginal accounts in which the purchaser put up less than $1,000. The board, while considering all kinds of proposals, has not yet reached any conclusions, it was explained. The marginal trading provisions of the law do not become effective until October 1.

Tangier, Va., July 26 (Spl.).—Hundreds of former residents of this quaint little island town in lower Chesapeake Bay returned today for the annual "home-coming" celebration. A large number of other visitors were present.

Hundreds of motorists arrived in Crisfield, 12 miles from here, this morning and were conveyed to Tangier by fast motorboats, where they enjoyed an elaborate program.

The main part of the celebration was held in Swain Methodist Episcopal Church, of which the Rev. C. Bailey is pastor. A special service was held tonight in the church, at which several former residents took part.

Large crowds swarmed the beach side of the island this afternoon, where a part of the celebration was held which included swimming and diving and motorboat races.

Woman Slain; Killer Is Found Suicide Victim

Double Tragedy Revealed by Posse Hunt Near Waynesboro.

Waynesboro, Va., July 26 (Spl.).—A double tragedy was discovered here today in the murder of Mrs. Ida Truslow, 42, wife of Jesse J. Truslow, State highway employe, and suicide of the killer, Emmett Bryant, jr., 31, Nelson County farmer.

Investigation by Dr. J. C. Everett, coroner, determined that Mrs. Truslow was shot at about 7:30 a. m. by Bryant, who had left his home in the Nellys Ford section, about a half-mile away, an hour earlier, telling his family that he was going squirrel hunting.

There were no eyewitnesses to the shooting, but a 12-year-old daughter of the slain woman was nearby and notified her father. The gunshot wound entered the woman's right breast. The coroner said she was shot from a distance of only 1 or 2 feet.

Citizens of the community quickly organized a widespread hunt for Bryant. State Traffic Officers R. A. Lynn, of Staunton, and L. J. Cosby, of Waynesboro, were called and took charge of the searchers, who were scouring the Blue Ridge foothills. Bloodhounds from Lynchburg failed to pick up the trail and the searchers had returned for further instructions when A. B. Small, a fisherman, reported finding Bryant's body alongside a small Nelson County stream, about half the distance between the Truslow and Bryant homes.

The coroner pronounced him a suicide. The shell which killed him was the last one on his person. He was reported to have had six shells when he left home this morning.

During the hunt friends of Bryant insisted to officers that he fired in self-defense, pointing out that two shotgun shells were clasped in the hand of Mrs. Truslow when her body was found and that a gun was hanging directly over the doorway.

Witnesses before the coroner's jury testified that Bryant had known Mrs. Truslow over a long period of time. Mr. Truslow said that he considered Bryant a friend of his and that he knew of no motive for the killing. Mrs. Truslow is survived by her husband and three young children, while Bryant, son of a prominent Nelson orchardist, was unmarried.

Threat of Rise In Milk Price ReappearsHere

Farmers Ask More, but Say It Need Not Be Passed to Buyer.

The threat of a rise in Washington milk prices, already higher than those of nearly every other city in the country, appeared again yesterday with the statement by Frank S. Walker, president of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, that farmers must have better prices for their milk in order to survive.

Walker said that an increase of 2 cents a gallon in the farm price of fluid milk, which his association will ask for in September, need not necessarily be passed on to the consumer. Distributors, however, would make no such commitment, preferring to withhold statements until officially notified by the producers' group.

"There is no need to pass on the 2-cent per gallon increase," said 2-cent-per-gallon increase," said Walker, pointing out that the retailers already make a gross profit of 23.5 cents a gallon on milk the farmers sell them for about 28.5 cents. "If the distributors raise the retail price to 14 cents a quart (it is now 13), we, the farmers, will demand 4 cents more a gallon instead of 2."

The head of the association blamed the drought for the farmers' plight. For the first time since the 1930 drought, he said, farmers were forced to buy feed for their cattle. "They haven't enough money to buy feed to produce the milk for Washington, and, unless they get more for their product, there will be a shortage of milk on this market," he declared.

The NRA had also done much to increase costs, he added. In recent years also $1,000,000 has been spent for improvements by farmers on the District market, in order to produce what Walker said was the highest grade milk in the country.

Negotiations are now proceeding at the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, somewhat gingerly, for a milk license for this District. Officials there have pointed out previously that a rise in the farm price for milk would not necessarily mean higher prices for the consumer, particularly in a case where retail prices are already high. Their aims have been to get more of the consumers' dollar into the farmers' pockets, by eliminating certain market prices which benefit the distributors.

Faction to Ask Goldsborough Run for Senate

Baltimore G.O.P. Group to Urge Him to Quit Governor's Race.

Baltimore, July 26 (Spl.).—Abandonment of United States Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough's race for the Republican nomination for Governor of Maryland will be asked by the G. O. P. State central committee for Baltimore City, it was learned today.

The committee will ask the Senator to run instead for his party's renomination to the Senate

So many members of the city committee are already pledged to support Harry W. Nice for the G. O. P. gubernatorial nomination that Senator Goldsborough is unable to muster many supporters in the committee, it is said

Letter Prompted Parley.

The issue came to a head last night when members of the city committee received letters from Senator Goldsborough, asking them individually to call on him and discuss his campaign. The committee members communicated with one another, and an informal meeting of virtually the entire personnel followed, with the Senator's letter as the chief topic.

Exactly what happened at the meeting could not be learned, but the final result was that William P. Lawson, chairman of the committee, was instructed to name a sub-committee to call on the Senator and urge him to drop out of the gubernatorial race. The sub-committee will tell him, it is said, that he stands no chance of weaning from Nice the support of the committee members pledged to him.

But the sub-committee was instructed to inform the Senator that he would be accorded the support of the city committee if he would consent to run again for the senatorial nomination.

Nice First in Field.

Nice, the first candidate in the G. O. P. race for Governor, has lined up a powerful group of backers, not only in Baltimore but in the counties of the State, and up until the time Senator Goldsborough entered the campaign Nice was looked upon as having the gubernatorial nomination clinched.

Another development on the political front today was an announcement by State Insurance Commissioner William C. Walsh, of Allegheny County, that he will be a candidate for the post of chairman of the Democratic State central committee to succeed the present chairman, J. Enos Ray, of Prince Georges County.

Ray is collector of internal revenue for the Maryland district and, under orders of Treasury Secretary Morgenthau, he must resign either his Federal job or cease his political activities. At the meeting of the State central committee at the Rennert Hotel here yesterday, it was announced that Ray would give up his committee chairmanship. He is ill in a Washington hospital and was unable to attend the meeting.

Walsh is said to be supported by the Ritchie faction of the Democratic party for the committee chairmanship.

Alleged Killers InBank Holdup Are Returned

Richmond, July 26 (Spl.).—Double-handcuffed together, two alleged bad men, Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, were brought back to Richmond today to face first degree murder charges.

A conference will be held tomorrow to fix the date of their trial, which probably will be between August 10 and 15, Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon said.

Met by a squad of seven officers, the men, both small, had nothing to say as they were escorted by back streets to the City Jail.

In a move to forestall possible habeas corpus proceedings, Mais and Legenza were taken from Annapolis, Md., where extradition proceedings were held yesterday, directly to Alexandria. They were at police headquarters there until early today, and then continued the trip to Richmond. Haddon returned to Richmond last night, leaving them in charge of Detective Sergts. F. M. Bosquet and O. T. Garton.

Mais today showed no signs of the police bullets which kept him in a Baltimore hospital for more than six weeks. He and Legenza were captured there on June 4, wanted for participation in a $13,000 bank holdup and a $2,500 brewery robbery.

Meanwhile, a Federal detective and postal inspector left Washington today to bring back Arthur Misanas, indicted here with Mais and Davis on a charge of the holdup and killing of E. M. Huband, Federal Reserve driver, last March. Misanas was arrested as he sat in a San Francisco bar last Monday.

It is understood that the reason extradition of Mais and Legenza was allowed is that authorities here have three witnesses of the mail robbery who can positively identify the participants. Authorities have closely hidden the identities of these witnesses for fear of harm to them from other members of the gang.

The entire organization, however, variously known as the Tri-State and Big George Phillips gang, is now believed to be wiped out. All nine persons identified by police with its operations have now either been arrested or slain.

The Governor's office released the audit today.

Chincoteague's Pony-Penning Featured by Sports Contests

By Wade DuBose.

Chincoteague, Va., July 26.—Large droves of tugging and scared Chincoteague ponies today were brought from their wild carefree life of the marshes into the bonds of a corral and civilization as this small island celebrated its historical pony-penning day.

The ponies were sold in small numbers to various buyers to be shipped throughout the East.

Bucking bronchos, horse races a swimming race, boat racing, boxing matches and a demonstration by the Coast Guard also marked the little village's annual gala event.

The sale and roundup of the small, shaggy ponies which, legend says, were descendants of horses shipwrecked from a Spanish merchantman, began about 8 a. m. and lasted until dark.

Horse Races Held.

The first event included horse races. Easter, owned by Henry Leonard and Robert Beebe, won the first race. The second was taken by Trixie, owned by Earl B. Hill.

Mack Williams, of Wilmington, Del., riding a bucking stallion, was the second event of the morning. Williams was allowed neither saddle nor reins and remained on a pony approximately two seconds.

The second attempt was made by Frank M. McGee, of Philadelphia, who rode for the full five minutes and received a $10 prize.

The afternoon amusements included a 75-yard swimming race, in which Raymond White, of the Assateague Coast Guard Station, came in first before a cheering crowd of several thousand people. Theodore Mitchell, of the Lewes, Del., station, was second and Clem E. Levendoski, of Hog Island, third.

Half-Mile Boat Race.

Wallops Beach Coast Guard Station was first in the half-mile boat race. The boat was purposely capsized and righted during the race. The time was 2 minutes and 30 seconds. Lewes, Del., was second and Hog Island third.

The afternoon ended with a demonstration from the Wallops and Assateague Beach Coast Guard Stations in which Boatsman Ira Andrews eight men rescued Asher Walker from a supposedly sinking boat. The boat was in the center of the carnival grounds.

A line was shot him by cannon and breeches buoy sent up. Walker came down to the mythical beach in the buoy. District Commander C. J. Sullivan, of the Sixth District Coast Guard, presented loving cups to the winners of the afternoon.

Truck Driver, Held After Accident Near Winchester, Had Day's Supply of Raw Silk for Plant in North Carolina.

Winchester, Va., July 26 (Spl.).—Detention of the driver of a silk truck here today on charges of failing to stop after an accident resulted in the closing down temporarily of a large silk mill in North Carolina, it was reported by the driver.

While proceeding from Cumberland, Md., to Mount Airy, N. C., last night with a heavy load of raw silk, a truck driven by Tom McMullen and an automobile operated by C. I. Wood, of Toms Brook, Va., collied on a curve west of Winchester. The truck did not stop, and the police, upon being informed of the accident, hailed the truck here and arrested McMullen.

Magistrate A. J. Tavenner accepted McMullen's version and fined him the minimum of $1. McMullen was ordered to pay the damage to the Wood machine, $48.86.

McMullen said the truck contained silk for today's work at the mill. As a result of his nonarrival at Mount Airy the mill had closed for the day, throwing 700 people out of work, he had been informed.

Kane was accused of being found drunk on somebody's back porch. No charge was lodged against Ruffles.

"Judge, your honor," said Kane, "you dismissed us two years ago. How about now?"

"Who's us?" queried the magistrate.

"Me and Ruffles," replied Kane. Ruffles looked plaintively at the magistrate and tried to wag a stumpy tail.

"Will it be two years before you're here again?" the magistrate asked. Kane assured him it would, and walked out, a free man, with Ruffles trotting complacently beside him.

Mgr. Cunnane, Oldest Active Priest in Archdiocese, Is 81

Baltimore, July 26 (Spl.).—Mgr. Joseph A. Cunnane, the oldest active priest in the Archdiocese of Baltimore and formerly pastor of St. Mary's Church in St. Marys County, today celebrated his eighty-first birthday at Bedford Springs, Pa.

For the last 40 years Mgr. Cunnane has spent July at the Pennsylvania resort. This year he is in perfect health, he wrote to his associate priests at St. Andrew's Catholic Church here. He is pastor of St. Andrew's.

He was born July 26, 1853, in Louisiana, and was brought to Ellicott City, Md., by his parents at the age of 4. He attended St. Charles College and St. Mary's Seminary, and later was graduated from the American College in Rome. He was ordained a priest at Marseilles, France, in 1879.

His first charge was in St. Marys County, where, during a smallpox epidemic, he served as both priest and physician. He left to become curate at St. Andrew's Church here in 1900. He was later priest at the church, and in 1924 was made a monsignor. In 1929 he celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his consecration as a priest.

Virginia Young Democrats to Meet Today

Loudoun County Group Urges Reelection of John Galleher.

Leesburg, Va., July 26 (Spl.).—Delegates from the Loudoun County Young Democratic Club, instructed to vote as a unit, left this evening for Lynchburg to attend the State convention tomorrow and Saturday.

Those departing included the State president, John Galleher, and Mrs. Galleher, C. S. Saffer, W. J. Luck, R. T. Corbell, T. Frank Osburn, Mrs. T. Frank Osburn, James di Zerega, Jack Russell, Gilbert Harding, W. C. Hall, Stilson Hall, Howard Armfield, C. Fenton Connor, Miss Mildred Russell, Dr. Herbert Howard, Charles Warren, Randolph Tillett, Edward Norman, Reid Mays, Owen Thomas, jr., Jack Potterfield and Robert Wright.

The club unanimously indorsed the Administration of President Roosevelt, favored the reelection of John Galleher as State president and indorsed legalized racing and the pari-mutuel system in Virginia.

John J. Wicker, jr., will be temporary chairman and keynote speaker at the Lynchburg convention. Senators Carter Glass and Harry F. Byrd will address the gathering.

G. O. P. Candidate May Oppose Byrd

Roanoke, Va., July 26 (AP).—A regular Republican candidate for the United States Senate in opposition to Senator Harry Flood Byrd, appeared as a possibility today as Republican leaders laid plans for meetings of the State executive committee and the State committee of the party here Saturday.

The executive committee will meet at 10 a. m. and the State committee at 2 p. m. Both sessions will be in the Patrick Henry Hotel.

Party leaders pointed out that the sessions will be the first formal meetings of either committee since the 1933 gubernatorial campaign. Outwardly the party has shown little activity since that time except for the nomination of Fred C. Parks, of Abingdon, to oppose Representative John W. Flannagan, of the Ninth District.

Leading Republicans indicated today that the meetings here will decide if a State convention is to be held to nominate a Republican to oppose Byrd. If it is decided to hold such a convention the place will be decided during Saturday's sessions.

Senator Byrd was opposed last year by Maj. Henry A. Wise. Senator Byrd has borne the brunt of Virginia Republican attacks in recent years.

Clinic Assured W. Va. Children

Infantile Paralysis Victims to Take Cure at Berkeley Springs.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., July 26 (Spl.).—The infantile paralysis program for Berkeley Springs, using the medical waters of Bath as the center of the clinic, is an assured fact, in the opinion of D. C. Fearnow, president of the chamber of commerce.

The Pines, a 20-room house on the heights just east of Berkeley Springs has been donated by its 20 clubmen owners for a year for the experiment; the State welfare board is working with the Warm Springs (Ga.) Foundation, and the board of directors for the project has been appointed.

All plans have been shifted from a 6-month to a 12-month basis.

The State welfare board has several hundred youngsters on its rolls who should come under the infantile paralysis treatment, said Mr. Fearnow, and patients for the first clinic will be selected from these. The clinic staff will be selected by the State Medical Association, and the Warm Springs Foundation has promised to help.

The recently named board of directors, which will work with the State welfare board, consists of J. A. Proctor, Mr. Fearnow, Jack Hunter, the Rev. Mr. Isaac, Senator J. E. Helsley, C. S. Trump, Mrs. Gertrude Majally, secretary of the chamber of commerce, formerly of Gov. Conley's secretarial staff, and Charles B. Osmond.

Mr. Kennedy's Assurances.

In his address before the National Press Club, Chairman Kennedy, of the Securities Exchange Commission, made it clear that the commisssion does not intend to sit as a mere prosecutor. Instead of devoting itself to the negative work of suppression, the chief task of the commission, its chairman promises, will be to encourage the expansion of the security business by establishing positive regulatory standards of a protective, not a prohibitive, character.

The new chairman of the S. E. C. has shown that he understands the magnitude of the undertaking ahead and that he views it as an essentially technical job that "must be done in a businesslike way, without political publicity of any sort." That simple statement, together with the emphasis placed upon the need to restore investment confidence and to allow "proper profits" to financing agencies, reinforces the assertion that the commission will try to assist recovery, not to impose reforms that destroy the regulated institutions. To Mr. Kennedy "It is a commonplace to say that the recovery program to be finally successful needs a sound and broad security market."

Certainly reasonable regulation of the type that Mr. Kennedy has outlined ought to assist the creation of such a market. But reasonable regulation alone can not make up for a lack of investment confidence engendered by monetary uncertainty and unsound fiscal policies.

S. P. Q. R.

"The Senators" have been taking us too seriously. We do not mean those who assemble under the dome of the Capitol. They do not always take us seriously enough. We mean "the Senators" with quotation marks around them: the Washington baseball team, so yclept.

Some time ago we published a mildly facetious editorial on the Baltimore "Orioles," saying that their unfaltering ability to lose three games out of every four played conferred a certain distinction. And now "the Senators," a thoroughly Washingtonian institution, are doing what nothing Washingtonian ever did before: imitating the Maryland metropolis. They won their league pennant last season; of late, they are hardly able to get to first base.

This we can not approve. We predicated our tribute to the Baltimore nine on the fact that they are so far last as to be certain to remain there. We said that this was a much more interesting position than fifth or sixth place, where Washington is wavering.

Harvard undergraduates used to say the model "Harvard man" was he who gained no higher mark than "B" in his examinations and always kept his name out of the newspapers. But, despite the prevalence of Harvard men in Washington, Washington isn't Harvard—yet. Moreover, Mr. Cronin's hopefuls scarcely rate a "B," and are receiving plenty of comment. Hinc illae lacrimae.

Arbitration After Strife.

After almost three months of industrial conflict, culminating in a general strike, the San Francisco longshoremen have, by a vote of over 4 to 1, agreed to submit all differences to arbitration.

Neither the prolonged strike of the longshoremen nor the desperate effort to coerce a whole community into acceptance of the workers' demands, settled any of the issues in dispute. From the beginning, it was apparent that the chief point of difference—control of the hiring halls—was an arbitrable question that could be settled with ease provided a willingness to do so existed. Yet it took violence, bloodshed, and a near approach to overthrow of the local government to convince the parties to the dispute that a compromise was possible.

The abuses that have grown up under the hiring hall system are notorious. Workers' grievances are very real, but at the same time, insistence upon union control of the halls might well introduce new evils for those remedied. The basis for a compromise was plainly there—calling for the interposition of a disinterested agency of control that would operate the hiring halls in the best interests of both parties. For such purposes, the Government itself can offer qualified agencies such as the Federal Employment Service.

The alternative which the unions and their employers are said to be considering—that is joint employer-union control, would eliminate the worst evils of one-sided control. It would, however, afford insufficient guarantees against friction and eventual possible collusion between representatives of employers and workers, leading to a recurrence of abuses often seen elsewhere.

Having learned that stubborn resistance to just demands and violent efforts to obtain redress must end in mutual concessions, the employing companies and the longshoremen should seize this opportunity to effect a compromise that promises to be of a constructive and enduring character. There are available neutral and competent authorities to accept the responsibility of impartial supervision.

The Root Of The Evil.

Any attempt to dissect the Austrian crisis with other than purely secondary explanations leads inevitably back to the punitive and short-sighted provisions of the misnamed treaties of peace, concluded in 1919. Any attempt really to cure that festering sore in the heart of Balkanized Europe must squarely face the issue of whether those treaties are any longer worth the cost of maintaining them as written.

For over 15 years now Austria has been a slowly dying nation, spreading the infection of her inoculated disease throughout the heart of Europe. Constant oxygenation has been necessary to keep this political remnant alive. Relief agencies have poured in food for Austria's undernourished children. The League of Nations has sought to reconstruct her hopeless finances and has obtained loans for her. All this has served no real constructive purpose. The food has gone; the money has gone; only the miserable plight of Austria remains.

For over 15 years now Germany has been a sorely crippled nation, bound down by terms of permanent inferiority never before inflicted on a sovereign state. Her economic plight has not been as desperate as that of Austria. Her mental anguish has been greater; for just enough was left to Germany to keep her hope alive. That much was denied to the less powerful of the old central empires.

So, side by side in Europe, neurotic Germany and pauperized Austria have been told to look forward indefinitely, the one to alien domination and the other to being a vassal pawn of great-power politics. Of course it can be said that these defeated nations played, and lost, and should not whine. Of course it can be said that their neighbors were justified in fearing their recovery. All sorts of defenses for the peace treaties can be made. But after that this fact remains: They will not work. They have broken down on reparations; they have broken down on disarmament. They would probably break down on their territorial terms except that a ring of bayonets still props these up.

An almost inevitable result of this situation is what has just happened in Austria. Fanaticism, bred by despair, has struck at the tottering foundations of the European peace system. Peace, of a sort, may be reestablished this time, not because any of the problems which menace it have been solved, but simply because the big battalions are ready to drown any Austro-German revolt in a sea of blood. So much for this particular putsch. But how about the next, coming perhaps at a time when desperation has ceased to count the costs?

In the Covenant of the League of Nations is one vital article, never yet invoked. "The Assembly," it reads, "may from time to time advise the reconsideration by members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable, and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world."

If there was ever a time in history when treaties were obviously inapplicable; if there were ever conditions which menace peace, these are the case today. On the League, it would seem, rests a virtual mandate to convene its Assembly in extraordinary session squarely to confront the task of preserving European civilization while there is yet time.

Such an Assembly should do more than talk. It should organize itself as a new peace conference, a real peace conference, to which the defeated countries would come on a basis of equality to state their case and help arrange a settlement sufficiently reasonable to endure. A fantastic idea? Perhaps; yet less fantastic certainly than the actual state of Europe today. And who will assert that the steadily growing problems of fanatical dictatorships, of underground revolutionary movements, of paralyzing economic distress and of ever-mounting armaments, can be solved by any less forthright effort than that which is proposed?

It seems insufficiently realized that the one treaty of 1919 which has worked satisfactorily is that which was never put into operation. Turkey revolted against the terms she was ordered to sign, and Turkey today is the only defeated nation which is going forward and not back; which is a help and not a menace to her neighbors. Under duress the terms of the Turkish settlement were intelligently revised, and the revision has proved universally desirable.

It does not seem illogical to suppose that similar revisions, cooperatively undertaken, would work not merely to the advantage of Germany and Austria and Hungary, but more especially for world benefit, if statesmanship exists to take advantage of an opportunity which may not be indefinitely present.

Rum Row Again.

During the last half of the fiscal year ended June 30 the Bureau of Internal Revenue collected on the average approximately $8,200,000 monthly through the excise tax on distilled spirits. During May and June, however, receipts fell below this average, amounting to but slightly more than $7,000,000 in each of these months. Even at the high rate of $2 per gallon, revenues are running well below conservative prerepeal estimates, and below the amounts realized when the excise tax was only $1.10 per gallon.

Receipts from imported distilled spirits have also been negligible during the past year, although the customs duty and the excise tax combined amount to $7 per gallon.

Some irreconcilable "drys" maintain that this record indicates prohibition succeeded in cutting down consumption of hard liquors. Changed habits, it is said, account for the disappointing revenue returns. Federal agents, however, are daily providing evidence which refutes this contention. In spite of reduced appropriations, inadequate forces, and lack of State cooperation, seizures of illegal stills, arrests of bootleggers and confiscation of illicit liquor continue on an extensive scale.

In addition to these domestic troubles, Treasury officials are confronted by a revival of smuggling which has assumed large proportions. Fourteen "rum runners" are known to be loitering off the North Atlantic seaboard at present, and officials are considering increases in the Coast Guard to combat this old menace.

Unreasonably high taxation is destroying or at least preventing a revival of the legalized industry in distilled spirits by encouraging expansion of illicit activities. Unless action is taken, therefore, to reduce excise and import duties the country may expect disappointingly low revenues, accompanied by rising costs of administration and a reversion to the type of lawlessness characteristic of the prohibition era.

To Improve The NRA.

Believing that the NRA was established to meet a serious emergency, few of those affected by this legislation were at first inclined to question its constitutionality, or to urge immediate revision of its hastily drawn provisions. But obviously the time has now come for a judicial testing of the act and for careful consideration of proposals designed to eliminate its more obvious imperfections.

Examination indicates that much of the trouble arising between code authorities and recalcitrant industrial concerns is traceable to administrative defects in the existing system. The labor provisions of the recovery act, for instance, should not be incorporated in a law providing for the legalization of trade agreements among industrial competitors. The administrative agencies that undertake to enforce approved regulations should not be empowered to discipline violators of code provisions until the courts have carefully defined the limits of their authority. The law is both too comprehensive as regards the field covered and too careless in its grants of legislative and judicial powers to the executive branch of government.

Admitting that labor costs vitally affect the ability of an individual concern to adhere to an industrial code, it is evident that a general labor policy, provided it is reasonable, can be applied over an extensive industrial area. On the other hand, comprehensive codes of fair practice are impracticable. Each industry has special problems to deal with, and agreements can not follow a general pattern.

The Harriman Hosiery Mills, for instance, were disciplined for alleged failure to conform to labor policies of general applicability. Other cases have arisen in which code violators have observed all labor provisions, but have refused to follow the approved production and price policies of their group. Clearly, there would be more expeditious handling of disputes, and difficulties could be more easily isolated, if separate provision were made for the unrelated labor and trade policies of industries operating under codes.

Senator Nye, as one sympathetic student of the problem, favors such a segregation and has made some valuable recommendations as to the way in which it might be assured. He suggests, for example, that the administration of code labor provisions might be centralized in the Department of Labor, and that codes of fair practice should be offered for approval to the Federal Trade Commission. The Senator also thinks that special industrial courts might be established to hear complaints of code violations from industry itself, instead of leaving the work of enforcement to a "great staff of overseers."

Although these are tentative proposals, they indicate the lines along which constructive reform should be carried out. Exclusive attention to the Constitutional issues involved in the recovery legislation, or sweeping demands for its abolition, will not serve the needs of the time. Industry is as unwilling as labor to revert to the condition of unregulated competition, or rather of competition under legal compulsion, which created the "unfair" conditions from which escape is sought.

The Uses Of Adversity.

Not only love laughs at locksmiths. Benvenuto Cellini got out of prison by his wits; Richard Coeur de Lion with the help of an arrow. And now, confined in the town jail of Yuma, Ariz., on charges of violating the immigration laws, Pedro Loranza emigrates thence by prying a bar from a window with his wooden leg.

This is delightful. It is also a logical development in an old tradition. The artificial leg has long had many more than lowly pedestrian uses. It was a genuine business asset to one of Dickens' most cheerful swindlers. It was used by John Silver as a missile. It was the pride of John Godfrey Saxe's chief heroine—and the weapon with which she was murdered. Hollow artificial legs are the ancient aids of all champion alcoholics. There is no end to man's resourcefulness. A sturdy hickory limb as well as a vivid imagination can prove that:

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage.

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Vienna said the Austrian army invaded Serbia, driving the Serbian troops before it. Sir Edward Grey, of England, proposed a plan for joint mediation, which France and Italy accepted, but Germany's acceptance was doubtful. Sergius Sarzonoff, Russian minister of foreign affairs, through the Austrian Ambassador, attempted to bring about a direct understanding, and urged Serbia to give Austria full satisfaction.

IT WAS ESTIMATED that a general European conflict would take an army of 1,000,000 men from America. This included the men who could be summoned by their governments for service, and also those who would volunteer to fight for their native countries.

Theme Songs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On July 17 the National Broadcasting Co. announced a program to be given by Oliver, Andre and Emily Roosevelt, all distant relatives to President and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Oliver and Emily were to render Oliver's musical composition, "Chasing Rainbows," and Andre, the explorer, was to "tell of his adventures while seeking the unknown."

It must be an old family custom!

The Near West.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is astonishing how many people, as far East as New York, regard Nebraska as a green, little country-jake State.

Washington people are not so provincial as most of them have been. I have made a number of New York people amazed and amused at the idea of talking to a person from away out in Nebraska, and discovering a fairly intelligent and normal one from so far West.

Not long ago a New York paper published a list of the books most widely read in various cities. "Anthony Adverse" headed the list. Neither Lincoln, Nebr., nor any other city of that State was included in the list; yet I have read "Anthony Adverse," darn 'em, and I believe several others in that far-away State have also read it.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Administration thought when it picked out Clarence Darrow to show up the NRA that he would give it a clean bill of health on the score of Socialistic experiments. It should now ask Mr. Darrow to pass on some of its other activities. NRA, the black sheep of the Democratic flock, is slated to go. Mr. Darrow was the public executioner, but the death warrant was signed by someone else, politically more astute than Mr. Darrow.

Well, in the maize of politics, even the guides sometimes get lost. More politicians are wrecked by their webs than by the machinations of their opponents. "Oh, what a tangled web we weave, when first we practice to deceive." The Administration started to deceive when it threw its platform overboard and stole Norman Thomas' thunder. That is the political crime of the ages. No political party ever before wittingly stole its opponent's cake. It surreptitiously took a little of the frosting, but the whole cake, never.

Catering to Morbidity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: J. Edgar Hoover, in recounting some of John Dillinger's exploits, tells that at one time Dillinger posed as a reporter for a "crime" magazine and obtained full information from a police headquarters as to the weapons and anticrime methods they had available.

What business had such a magazine with this information, anyway? Who might be expected to read most avidly the contents of such a magazine if not criminals and would-be criminals?

Too many publishers, like too many motion picture producers, have been, under cover of the all-sufficient excuse of "giving the public what it wants," catering to the tastes of the morbid, the criminal and the irresponsible portions of our population by inviting the mind to a contemplation of the details of a crime. Browning said, "We grow like the things our souls believe." He might as truly have said, "We grow like the things our minds consider."

It is no one's right to "give the public what it wants," if that means giving it what excites its worst passions and dulls its sense of responsibility. Every civilization that has fallen through its own luxury and vice has previously been very thoroughly fed and gorged on "what it wanted" by the mercenary diversion makers of its time.

Our Error.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The paragraph beginning at the end of column 3 of page 3 of the Magazine Section of The Post, dated July 22, being a part of the article relating to the centenary celebration in memory of James Cardinal Gibbons, contains a statement reading as follows: "The President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, attended the closing ceremonies of the council. Father Gibbons had the honor of meeting him . . ." It appears that the council was held in 1866.

Since Andrew Jackson was President during the years 1829 to 1837, it is evident that the statement referred to is in error. Our history shows us that Andrew Johnson was President during 1866.

The article indicates that between the years 1837 and 1853 the Gibbons family had returned to and resided in Ireland.

It seems rather important that historical facts should be accurately stated. In this particular instance I noted that another Washington newspaper published the same error, which goes to show that some people take many things for granted.

JOHN F. HAUCK.

Washington, July 23.

"C. S. Exams."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In all fairness, it would seem that every citizen of the United States should have the undisputed Constitutional right of taking any Civil Service examination given. But such is not the case. In cases where college degrees are the rule and a self-taught person is barred, there is rank discrimination. Such a condition should immediately be corrected. If continued it will eventually result in the death of the Civil Service Commission.

Educational requirements should not come within the scope of the commission; the examination given by that body should be the only test. If a person can pass any examination undertaken it should automatically prove beyond any question of doubt that the applicant is properly qualified to competently fill the position; if he can not pass it, then that will prove the reverse. This is a serious matter and one that demands the immediate attention of all concerned, particularly those interested in the continued life of the commission.

"While There's Life."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some people are committing suicide these days—trying to run away from life, tired of the game because they think they have nothing to live for. But not I! Not while Carlisle Bargeron writes "Along the Potomac" for the morning Post. His delightful satiric manner of revealing "inside information" is too good to miss.

Then, too, I like Thurston, Clapper, Robey and, how I do enjoy Robles! Robert Quillen is a tonic for the soul, but I live for Bargeron!

"Absence Makes the Heart—"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was very glad indeed to read Mrs. Isabel G. Barker's recent letter in The Post. We miss the Postilion dreadfully while in St. Petersburg, Fla., and feel that it would do a lot of good if the people there could hear Mr. Hull and just know what is going on up here.

True, we get The Post while there, but it is two days old. Even so, we pass it on to quite a few people to read and after our friends and neighbors read it we pass it on to the Soldiers' Home and it is read by many of the boys there. I, too, like Mr. Rice. I cut out and send away all letters that are interesting, also Mr. Bargeron's writings. I cut out all editorials, too, and send to friends in Pennsylvania, Florida, North Carolina and Maine. I do hope we will be able to hear Mr. Hull next winter in St. Petersburg, Fla.

China's "New Learning"

Prior to the second half of the nineteenth century, Chinese education had for its primary purpose the inculcation of moral principles rather than the imparting of substantive information or "facts." A second characteristic of this older educational scheme was that the central government concerned itself only with the holding of the examinations which tested the proficiency attained by the students. In the modern and present period of Chinese education we find not only the scope of instruction widened so as to include matters of scientific, philosophical and technological interest, but the provincial and local authorities as well as the central or national government conceiving it to be their proper function to provide the means and instrumentalities whereby their citizens may obtain higher as well as primary and intermediate instruction.

This new educational period may be said to have begun in 1905 when the old system of competitive examinations was abolished by imperial decree. However, the way had been prepared for this radical change by the schools, academies and universities which, for many years, the Christian missionary bodies had maintained in China.

It will not be possible within the space allotted to this article to deal in any technical or detailed way with the present educational system of China, but there can be indicated the general results attained, and some of the more important of the influences that have been operating in the intellectual life of China.

As regards results, so far as they may be shown by mere figures, it is reported that China now has 103 institutions of higher learning "registered" with the ministry of education. There are 41 universities, 13 of which are national institutions, 9 provincial and 19 private. There are 3 national independent colleges, 13 supported by provinces and 18 by private organizations. The technical colleges number 30, of which 2 are national.

A census of advanced students reveals that 16,487 are studying law and political science, 10,066 literature and philosophy, 4,231 education, 2,156 commerce, 4,084 engineering, 3,930 natural science, 1,800 medicine and 1,413 agriculture and forestry.

Here's Adverse Again!

Postoffice, Friday.

IT is not often that this column receives a contribution from Mexico. Therefore when we do receive one, we hasten to publish it. We hasten to publish the one hereinafter set forth even if it deals with a certain book that, to our mind, has received almost all the attention it deserves at the hands—we won't say the "intellects," as the Addisonians used to say—of the American public.

* * *

We do not refer to Prof. G. Elliot Smith's new edition of his anthropological work, "Human History"—to Sir William Rothenstein's Romanes Lectures on "Form and Content in English Painting"—to J. F. Ashby's "Story of the Banks," Frank P. Hill's "American Plays," Dr. Gustav Cassel's "From Protectionism Through Planned Economy to Dictatorship," nor yet to William E. Cole's dissertation on "The Teaching of Biology." These are all publications so recent that their ink is still wet, and we should rather like to read some of them.

But we have to refer to what our correspondent refers to. And that is "Anthony Adverse."

* * *

Anyway, you have to grant "Adverse" the quality of persistency.

So let's go.

* * *

Our contributor is Paul V. Murray. He dates his letter with these romantic characters: "4a Manzanillo 61, Mexico, D. F." And you won't have read half of what he writes before you agree with us that, however you may dissent from him upon some of his appreciations, those concluding initials do not stand for what the light-minded might suggest.

In fact, Mr. Murray demonstrates his wisdom in his first paragraph. He continues his subscription to The Washington Post while "in temporary exile," and he reads the Post-Impressionist.

* * *

He is moved, he says, to write us by what we wrote about "Adverse." He says:

"I may be one of the few persons in the United States, and possibly the only person in Mexico, who has struggled through Anthony's 1,225 pages, so I feel competent to pass judgment on a few points which other and more erudite critics may have overlooked. Not that I think any one should spend too much time in criticizing Hervey Allen's production. It is undoubtedly one of the notable literary efforts in this century."

* * *

We should, from what we have been told, conclude that "efforts" is the right word. However . . .

* * *

"I don't care," says Mr. Murray, like Disraeli, "how many mistakes Mr. Allen made. Nine-tenths of his critics probably lack the imagination to have conceived even one of the nine books of 'Anthony Adverse,' let alone the whole volume."

* * *

But it is only human to look for mistakes and to herald them when found. Even Mr. Murray succumbs. "Two errors of fact in the book," he continues, "are these:

"I have it on practically unimpeachable authority that a Franciscan priest who says Mass, hears confessions, etc., is always called 'Father,' as are all Roman Catholic priests. A lay-brother, who does not perform these sacred functions and who has never been ordained, is called 'Brother.' Yet Mr. Allen designates one of his best characters 'Brother Francois,' when that gentleman is unmistakably a priest.

"Again, in the last division of the novel—which is by far the weakest part of the entire volume because of the intrusion of absolutely too much coincidence—Mr. Allen describes his Anthony as being incarcerated in a Mexico City prison for lepers, through the roof of which he sees the gleaming figure of 'The White Woman,' or Iztaccihuati. I must take issue with Mr. Allen there. The old building he mentions is still standing, but nowhere in it, or from the floor of any building in Mexico City, is it possible to see 'The White Woman,' which is situated a matter of some 50 miles from the city. What is true in this regard today must have been true at the time Anthony was supposed to have seen that grand volcano through the unfinished dome of his prison. Mountains rarely move!) Poetically, Mr. Allen's was a beautiful thought; actually, it is an impossibility."

What most confuses Mr. Murray in "Anthony Adverse" is, however, the attitude of its author toward things spiritual. Our contributor thinks that Mr. Allen employs a certain symbolism without ever quite grasping it.

He is sympathetic in his "projection of the characters of the Jesuit who gave Anthony so much early instruction, to the nuns of the convent where the boy was abandoned, to 'Brother' Francois. At the same time," says Mr. Murray, "I should like a true explanation of Anthony's groping after the true meaning of life when it would seem that Mr. Allen had eazly supplied him therewith. . . . Are we to assume that, like Mr. Eugene O'Neill, he himself is looking for something, has found it, but fails to realize that around which his seeking fingers have closed?"

* * *

Concerning this, we suggest that Mr. Murray write direct to Mr. Allen, whose admirable address is Felicity Hall, Somerset, Bermuda.

* * *

Concerning something else we are moved to confess a belief that we ourselves ought, after all, to read "Anthony Adverse." Until now, that grand total of 1,225 secular pages has frightened us. But the world becomes daily more insubstantial—and even though they are secular, 1,225 pages, if firmly bound, have at least substance.

Mr. Kennedy's Assurances.

In his address before the National Press Club, Chairman Kennedy, of the Securities Exchange Commission, made it clear that the commisssion does not intend to sit as a mere prosecutor. Instead of devoting itself to the negative work of suppression, the chief task of the commission, its chairman promises, will be to encourage the expansion of the security business by establishing positive regulatory standards of a protective, not a prohibitive, character.

The new chairman of the S. E. C. has shown that he understands the magnitude of the undertaking ahead and that he views it as an essentially technical job that "must be done in a businesslike way, without political publicity of any sort." That simple statement, together with the emphasis placed upon the need to restore investment confidence and to allow "proper profits" to financing agencies, reinforces the assertion that the commission will try to assist recovery, not to impose reforms that destroy the regulated institutions. To Mr. Kennedy "It is a commonplace to say that the recovery program to be finally successful needs a sound and broad security market."

Certainly reasonable regulation of the type that Mr. Kennedy has outlined ought to assist the creation of such a market. But reasonable regulation alone can not make up for a lack of investment confidence engendered by monetary uncertainty and unsound fiscal policies.

S. P. Q. R.

"The Senators" have been taking us too seriously. We do not mean those who assemble under the dome of the Capitol. They do not always take us seriously enough. We mean "the Senators" with quotation marks around them: the Washington baseball team, so yclept.

Some time ago we published a mildly facetious editorial on the Baltimore "Orioles," saying that their unfaltering ability to lose three games out of every four played conferred a certain distinction. And now "the Senators," a thoroughly Washingtonian institution, are doing what nothing Washingtonian ever did before: imitating the Maryland metropolis. They won their league pennant last season; of late, they are hardly able to get to first base.

This we can not approve. We predicated our tribute to the Baltimore nine on the fact that they are so far last as to be certain to remain there. We said that this was a much more interesting position than fifth or sixth place, where Washington is wavering.

Harvard undergraduates used to say the model "Harvard man" was he who gained no higher mark than "B" in his examinations and always kept his name out of the newspapers. But, despite the prevalence of Harvard men in Washington, Washington isn't Harvard—yet. Moreover, Mr. Cronin's hopefuls scarcely rate a "B," and are receiving plenty of comment. Hinc illae lacrimae.

Arbitration After Strife.

After almost three months of industrial conflict, culminating in a general strike, the San Francisco longshoremen have, by a vote of over 4 to 1, agreed to submit all differences to arbitration.

Neither the prolonged strike of the longshoremen nor the desperate effort to coerce a whole community into acceptance of the workers' demands, settled any of the issues in dispute. From the beginning, it was apparent that the chief point of difference—control of the hiring halls—was an arbitrable question that could be settled with ease provided a willingness to do so existed. Yet it took violence, bloodshed, and a near approach to overthrow of the local government to convince the parties to the dispute that a compromise was possible.

The abuses that have grown up under the hiring hall system are notorious. Workers' grievances are very real, but at the same time, insistence upon union control of the halls might well introduce new evils for those remedied. The basis for a compromise was plainly there—calling for the interposition of a disinterested agency of control that would operate the hiring halls in the best interests of both parties. For such purposes, the Government itself can offer qualified agencies such as the Federal Employment Service.

The alternative which the unions and their employers are said to be considering—that is joint employer-union control, would eliminate the worst evils of one-sided control. It would, however, afford insufficient guarantees against friction and eventual possible collusion between representatives of employers and workers, leading to a recurrence of abuses often seen elsewhere.

Having learned that stubborn resistance to just demands and violent efforts to obtain redress must end in mutual concessions, the employing companies and the longshoremen should seize this opportunity to effect a compromise that promises to be of a constructive and enduring character. There are available neutral and competent authorities to accept the responsibility of impartial supervision.

The Root Of The Evil.

Any attempt to dissect the Austrian crisis with other than purely secondary explanations leads inevitably back to the punitive and short-sighted provisions of the misnamed treaties of peace, concluded in 1919. Any attempt really to cure that festering sore in the heart of Balkanized Europe must squarely face the issue of whether those treaties are any longer worth the cost of maintaining them as written.

For over 15 years now Austria has been a slowly dying nation, spreading the infection of her inoculated disease throughout the heart of Europe. Constant oxygenation has been necessary to keep this political remnant alive. Relief agencies have poured in food for Austria's undernourished children. The League of Nations has sought to reconstruct her hopeless finances and has obtained loans for her. All this has served no real constructive purpose. The food has gone; the money has gone; only the miserable plight of Austria remains.

For over 15 years now Germany has been a sorely crippled nation, bound down by terms of permanent inferiority never before inflicted on a sovereign state. Her economic plight has not been as desperate as that of Austria. Her mental anguish has been greater; for just enough was left to Germany to keep her hope alive. That much was denied to the less powerful of the old central empires.

So, side by side in Europe, neurotic Germany and pauperized Austria have been told to look forward indefinitely, the one to alien domination and the other to being a vassal pawn of great-power politics. Of course it can be said that these defeated nations played, and lost, and should not whine. Of course it can be said that their neighbors were justified in fearing their recovery. All sorts of defenses for the peace treaties can be made. But after that this fact remains: They will not work. They have broken down on reparations; they have broken down on disarmament. They would probably break down on their territorial terms except that a ring of bayonets still props these up.

An almost inevitable result of this situation is what has just happened in Austria. Fanaticism, bred by despair, has struck at the tottering foundations of the European peace system. Peace, of a sort, may be reestablished this time, not because any of the problems which menace it have been solved, but simply because the big battalions are ready to drown any Austro-German revolt in a sea of blood. So much for this particular putsch. But how about the next, coming perhaps at a time when desperation has ceased to count the costs?

In the Covenant of the League of Nations is one vital article, never yet invoked. "The Assembly," it reads, "may from time to time advise the reconsideration by members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable, and the consideration of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world."

If there was ever a time in history when treaties were obviously inapplicable; if there were ever conditions which menace peace, these are the case today. On the League, it would seem, rests a virtual mandate to convene its Assembly in extraordinary session squarely to confront the task of preserving European civilization while there is yet time.

Such an Assembly should do more than talk. It should organize itself as a new peace conference, a real peace conference, to which the defeated countries would come on a basis of equality to state their case and help arrange a settlement sufficiently reasonable to endure. A fantastic idea? Perhaps; yet less fantastic certainly than the actual state of Europe today. And who will assert that the steadily growing problems of fanatical dictatorships, of underground revolutionary movements, of paralyzing economic distress and of ever-mounting armaments, can be solved by any less forthright effort than that which is proposed?

It seems insufficiently realized that the one treaty of 1919 which has worked satisfactorily is that which was never put into operation. Turkey revolted against the terms she was ordered to sign, and Turkey today is the only defeated nation which is going forward and not back; which is a help and not a menace to her neighbors. Under duress the terms of the Turkish settlement were intelligently revised, and the revision has proved universally desirable.

It does not seem illogical to suppose that similar revisions, cooperatively undertaken, would work not merely to the advantage of Germany and Austria and Hungary, but more especially for world benefit, if statesmanship exists to take advantage of an opportunity which may not be indefinitely present.

Rum Row Again.

During the last half of the fiscal year ended June 30 the Bureau of Internal Revenue collected on the average approximately $8,200,000 monthly through the excise tax on distilled spirits. During May and June, however, receipts fell below this average, amounting to but slightly more than $7,000,000 in each of these months. Even at the high rate of $2 per gallon, revenues are running well below conservative prerepeal estimates, and below the amounts realized when the excise tax was only $1.10 per gallon.

Receipts from imported distilled spirits have also been negligible during the past year, although the customs duty and the excise tax combined amount to $7 per gallon.

Some irreconciliable "drys" maintain that this record indicates prohibition succeeded in cutting down consumption of hard liquors. Changed habits, it is said, account for the disappointing revenue returns. Federal agents, however, are daily providing evidence which refutes this contention. In spite of reduced appropriations, inadequate forces, and lack of State cooperation, seizures of illegal stills, arrests of bootleggers and confiscation of illicit liquor continue on an extensive scale.

In addition to these domestic troubles, Treasury officials are confronted by a revival of smuggling which has assumed large proportions. Fourteen "rum runners" are known to be loitering off the North Atlantic seaboard at present, and officials are considering increases in the Coast Guard to combat this old menace.

Unreasonably high taxation is destroying or at least preventing a revival of the legalized industry in distilled spirits by encouraging expansion of illicit activities. Unless action is taken, therefore, to reduce excise and import duties the country may expect disappointingly low revenues, accompanied by rising costs of administration and a reversion to the type of lawlessness characteristic of the prohibition era.

To Improve The NRA.

Believing that the NRA was established to meet a serious emergency, few of those affected by this legislation were at first inclined to question its constitutionality, or to urge immediate revision of its hastily drawn provisions. But obviously the time has now come for a judicial testing of the act and for careful consideration of proposals designed to eliminate its more obvious imperfections.

Examination indicates that much of the trouble arising between code authorities and recalcitrant industrial concerns is traceable to administrative defects in the existing system. The labor provisions of the recovery act, for instance, should not be incorporated in a law providing for the legalization of trade agreements among industrial competitors. The administrative agencies that undertake to enforce approved regulations should not be empowered to discipline violators of code provisions until the courts have carefully defined the limits of their authority. The law is both too comprehensive as regards the field covered and too careless in its grants of legislative and judicial powers to the executive branch of government.

Admitting that labor costs vitally affect the ability of an individual concern to adhere to an industrial code, it is evident that a general labor policy, provided it is reasonable, can be applied over an extensive industrial area. On the other hand, comprehensive codes of fair practice are impracticable. Each industry has special problems to deal with, and agreements can not follow a general pattern.

The Harriman Hosiery Mills, for instance, were disciplined for alleged failure to conform to labor policies of general applicability. Other cases have arisen in which code violators have observed all labor provisions, but have refused to follow the approved production and price policies of their group. Clearly, there would be more expeditious handling of disputes, and difficulties could be more easily isolated, if separate provision were made for the unrelated labor and trade policies of industries operating under codes.

Senator Nye, as one sympathetic student of the problem, favors such a segregation and has made some valuable recommendations as to the way in which it might be assured. He suggests, for example, that the administration of code labor provisions might be centralized in the Department of Labor, and that codes of fair practice should be offered for approval to the Federal Trade Commission. The Senator also thinks that special industrial courts might be established to hear complaints of code violations from industry itself, instead of leaving the work of enforcement to a "great staff of overseers."

Although these are tentative proposals, they indicate the lines along which constructive reform should be carried out. Exclusive attention to the Constitutional issues involved in the recovery legislation, or sweeping demands for its abolition, will not serve the needs of the time. Industry is as unwilling as labor to revert to the condition of unregulated competition, or rather of competition under legal compulsion, which created the "unfair" conditions from which escape is sought.

The Uses Of Adversity.

Not only love laughs at locksmiths. Benvenuto Cellini got out of prison by his wits; Richard Coeur de Lion with the help of an arrow. And now, confined in the town jail of Yuma, Ariz., on charges of violating the immigration laws, Pedro Loranza emigrates thence by prying a bar from a window with his wooden leg.

This is delightful. It is also a logical development in an old tradition. The artificial leg has long had many more than lowly pedestrian uses. It was a genuine business asset to one of Dickens' most cheerful swindlers. It was used by John Silver as a missile. It was the pride of John Godfrey Saxe's chief heroine—and the weapon with which she was murdered. Hollow artificial legs are the ancient aids of all champion alcoholics. There is no end to man's resourcefulness. A sturdy hickory limb as well as a vivid imagination can prove that:

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage.

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Vienna said the Austrian army invaded Serbia, driving the Serbian troops before it. Sir Edward Grey, of England, proposed a plan for joint mediation, which France and Italy accepted, but Germany's acceptance was doubtful. Sergius Sarzonoff, Russian minister of foreign affairs, through the Austrian Ambassador, attempted to bring about a direct understanding, and urged Serbia to give Austria full satisfaction.

IT WAS ESTIMATED that a general European conflict would take an army of 1,000,000 men from America. This included the men who could be summoned by their governments for service, and also those who would volunteer to fight for their native countries.

Theme Songs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On July 17 the National Broadcasting Co. announced a program to be given by Oliver, Andre and Emily Roosevelt, all distant relatives to President and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Oliver and Emily were to render Oliver's musical composition, "Chasing Rainbows," and Andre, the explorer, was to "tell of his adventures while seeking the unknown."

It must be an old family custom!

The Near West.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is astonishing how many people, as far East as New York, regard Nebraska as a green, little country-jake State.

Washington people are not so provincial as most of them have been. I have made a number of New York people amazed and amused at the idea of talking to a person from away out in Nebraska, and discovering a fairly intelligent and normal one from so far West.

Not long ago a New York paper published a list of the books most widely read in various cities. "Anthony Adverse" headed the list. Neither Lincoln, Nebr., nor any other city of that State was included in the list; yet I have read "Anthony Adverse," darn 'em, and I believe several others in that far-away State have also read it.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Administration thought when it picked out Clarence Darrow to show up the NRA that he would give it a clean bill of health on the score of Socialistic experiments. It should now ask Mr. Darrow to pass on some of its other activities. NRA, the black sheep of the Democratic flock, is slated to go. Mr. Darrow was the public executioner, but the death warrant was signed by someone else, politically more astute than Mr. Darrow.

Well, in the maize of politics, even the guides sometimes get lost. More politicians are wrecked by their webs than by the machinations of their opponents. "Oh, what a tangled web we weave, when first we practice to deceive." The Administration started to deceive when it threw its platform overboard and stole Norman Thomas' thunder. That is the political crime of the ages. No political party ever before wittingly stole its opponent's cake. It surreptitiously took a little of the frosting, but the whole cake, never.

Catering to Morbidity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: J. Edgar Hoover, in recounting some of John Dillinger's exploits, tells that at one time Dillinger posed as a reporter for a "crime" magazine and obtained full information from a police headquarters as to the weapons and anticrime methods they had available.

What business had such a magazine with this information, anyway? Who might be expected to read most avidly the contents of such a magazine if not criminals and would-be criminals?

Too many publishers, like too many motion picture producers, have been, under cover of the all-sufficient excuse of "giving the public what it wants," catering to the tastes of the morbid, the criminal and the irresponsible portions of our population by inviting the mind to a contemplation of the details of a crime. Browning said, "We grow like the things our souls believe." He might as truly have said, "We grow like the things our minds consider."

It is no one's right to "give the public what it wants," if that means giving it what excites its worst passions and dulls its sense of responsibility. Every civilization that has fallen through its own luxury and vice has previously been very thoroughly fed and gorged on "what it wanted" by the mercenary diversion makers of its time.

Our Error.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The paragraph beginning at the end of column 3 of page 3 of the Magazine Section of The Post, dated July 22, being a part of the article relating to the centenary celebration in memory of James Cardinal Gibbons, contains a statement reading as follows: "The President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, attended the closing ceremonies of the council. Father Gibbons had the honor of meeting him . . ." It appears that the council was held in 1866.

Since Andrew Jackson was President during the years 1829 to 1837, it is evident that the statement referred to is in error. Our history shows us that Andrew Johnson was President during 1866.

The article indicates that between the years 1837 and 1853 the Gibbons family had returned to and resided in Ireland.

It seems rather important that historical facts should be accurately stated. In this particular instance I noted that another Washington newspaper published the same error, which goes to show that some people take many things for granted.

JOHN F. HAUCK.

Washington, July 23.

"C. S. Exams."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In all fairness, it would seem that every citizen of the United States should have the undisputed Constitutional right of taking any Civil Service examination given. But such is not the case. In cases where college degrees are the rule and a self-taught person is barred, there is rank discrimination. Such a condition should immediately be corrected. If continued it will eventually result in the death of the Civil Service Commission.

Educational requirements should not come within the scope of the commission; the examination given by that body should be the only test. If a person can pass any examination undertaken it should automatically prove beyond any question of doubt that the applicant is properly qualified to competently fill the position; if he can not pass it, then that will prove the reverse. This is a serious matter and one that demands the immediate attention of all concerned, particularly those interested in the continued life of the commission.

"While There's Life."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some people are committing suicide these days—trying to run away from life, tired of the game because they think they have nothing to live for. But not I! Not while Carlisle Bargeron writes "Along the Potomac" for the morning Post. His delightful satiric manner of revealing "inside information" is too good to miss.

Then, too, I like Thurston, Clapper, Robey and, how I do enjoy Robles! Robert Quillen is a tonic for the soul, but I live for Bargeron!

"Absence Makes the Heart—"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was very glad indeed to read Mrs. Isabel G. Barker's recent letter in The Post. We miss the Postilion dreadfully while in St. Petersburg, Fla., and feel that it would do a lot of good if the people there could hear Mr. Hull and just know what is going on up here.

True, we get The Post while there, but it is two days old. Even so, we pass it on to quite a few people to read and after our friends and neighbors read it we pass it on to the Soldiers' Home and it is read by many of the boys there. I, too, like Mr. Rice. I cut out and send away all letters that are interesting, also Mr. Bargeron's writings. I cut out all editorials, too, and send to friends in Pennsylvania, Florida, North Carolina and Maine. I do hope we will be able to hear Mr. Hull next winter in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Twice Right?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial on the death of Dillinger was admirable. The prevalent newspaper hysteria about that bandit is disgraceful.

China's "New Learning"

Prior to the second half of the nineteenth century, Chinese education had for its primary purpose the inculcation of moral principles rather than the imparting of substantive information or "facts." A second characteristic of this older educational scheme was that the central government concerned itself only with the holding of the examinations which tested the proficiency attained by the students. In the modern and present period of Chinese education we find not only the scope of instruction widened so as to include matters of scientific, philosophical and technological interest, but the provincial and local authorities as well as the central or national government conceiving it to be their proper function to provide the means and instrumentalities whereby their citizens may obtain higher as well as primary and intermediate instruction.

This new educational period may be said to have begun in 1905 when the old system of competitive examinations was abolished by imperial decree. However, the way had been prepared for this radical change by the schools, academies and universities which, for many years, the Christian missionary bodies had maintained in China.

It will not be possible within the space allotted to this article to deal in any technical or detailed way with the present educational system of China, but there can be indicated the general results attained, and some of the more important of the influences that have been operating in the intellectual life of China.

As regards results, so far as they may be shown by mere figures, it is reported that China now has 103 institutions of higher learning "registered" with the ministry of education. There are 41 universities, 13 of which are national institutions, 9 provincial and 19 private. There are 3 national independent colleges, 13 supported by provinces and 18 by private organizations. The technical colleges number 30, of which 2 are national.

A census of advanced students reveals that 16,487 are studying law and political science, 10,066 literature and philosophy, 4,231 education, 2,156 commerce, 4,084 engineering, 3,930 natural science, 1,800 medicine and 1,413 agriculture and forestry.

The Post Impressionist

Here's Adverse Again!

Postoffice, Friday.

IT is not often that this column receives a contribution from Mexico. Therefore when we do receive one, we hasten to publish it. We hasten to publish the one hereinafter set forth even if it deals with a certain book that, to our mind, has received almost all the attention it deserves at the hands—we won't say the "intellects," as the Addisonians used to say—of the American public.

* * *

We do not refer to Prof. G. Elliot Smith's new edition of his anthropological work, "Human History"—to Sir William Rothenstein's Romanes Lectures on "Form and Content in English Painting"—to J. F. Ashby's "Story of the Banks," Frank P. Hill's "American Plays," Dr. Gustav Cassel's "From Protectionism Through Planned Economy to Dictatorship," nor yet to William E. Cole's dissertation on "The Teaching of Biology." These are all publications so recent that their ink is still wet, and we should rather like to read some of them.

But we have to refer to what our correspondent refers to. And that is "Anthony Adverse."

* * *

Anyway, you have to grant "Adverse" the quality of persistency.

So let's go.

* * *

Our contributor is Paul V. Murray. He dates his letter with these romantic characters: "4a Manzanillo 61, Mexico, D. F." And you won't have read half of what he writes before you agree with us that, however you may dissent from him upon some of his appreciations, those concluding initials do not stand for what the light-minded might suggest.

In fact, Mr. Murray demonstrates his wisdom in his first paragraph. He continues his subscription to The Washington Post while "in temporary exile," and he reads the Post-Impressionist.

* * *

He is moved, he says, to write us by what we wrote about "Adverse." He says:

"I may be one of the few persons in the United States, and possibly the only person in Mexico, who has struggled through Anthony's 1,225 pages, so I feel competent to pass judgment on a few points which other and more erudite critics may have overlooked. Not that I think any one should spend too much time in criticizing Hervey Allen's production. It is undoubtedly one of the notable literary efforts in this century."

* * *

We should, from what we have been told, conclude that "efforts" is the right word. However . . .

* * *

"I don't care," says Mr. Murray, like Disraeli, "how many mistakes Mr. Allen made. Nine-tenths of his critics probably lack the imagination to have conceived even one of the nine books of 'Anthony Adverse,' let alone the whole volume."

* * *

But it is only human to look for mistakes and to herald them when found. Even Mr. Murray succumbs. "Two errors of fact in the book," he continues, "are these:

"I have it on practically unimpeachable authority that a Franciscan priest who says Mass, hears confessions, etc., is always called 'Father,' as are all Roman Catholic priests. A lay-brother, who does not perform these sacred functions and who has never been ordained, is called 'Brother.' Yet Mr. Allen designates one of his best characters 'Brother Francois,' when that gentleman is unmistakably a priest.

"Again, in the last division of the novel—which is by far the weakest part of the entire volume because of the intrusion of absolutely too much coincidence—Mr. Allen describes his Anthony as being incarcerated in a Mexico City prison for lepers, through the roof of which he sees the gleaming figure of 'The White Woman,' or Iztaccihuatl. I must take issue with Mr. Allen there. The old building he mentions is still standing, but nowhere in it, or from the floor of any building in Mexico City, is it possible to see 'The White Woman,' which is situated a matter of some 50 miles from the city. What is true in this regard today must have been true at the time Anthony was supposed to have seen that grand volcano through the unfinished dome of his prison. Mountains rarely move!) Poetically, Mr. Allen's was a beautiful thought; actually, it is an impossibility."

What most confuses Mr. Murray in "Anthony Adverse" is, however, the attitude of its author toward things spiritual. Our contributor thinks that Mr. Allen employs a certain symbolism without ever quite grasping it.

He is sympathetic in his "projection of the characters of the Jesuit who gave Anthony so much early instruction, to the nuns of the convent where the boy was abandoned, to 'Brother' Francois. At the same time," says Mr. Murray, "I should like a true explanation of Anthony's groping after the true meaning of life when it would seem that Mr. Allen had early supplied him therewith. . . . Are we to assume that, like Mr. Eugene O'Neill, he himself is looking for something, has found it, but fails to realize that around which his seeking fingers have closed?"

* * *

Concerning this, we suggest that Mr. Murray write direct to Mr. Allen, whose admirable address is Felicity Hall, Somerset, Bermuda.

* * *

Concerning something else we are moved to confess a belief that we ourselves ought, after all, to read "Anthony Adverse." Until now, that grand total of 1,225 secular pages has frightened us. But the world becomes daily more insubstantial—and even though they are secular, 1,225 pages, if firmly bound, have at least substance.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

Triumph of Liberalism.

I DARE say, if you happen to own a block of stock in some factory putting out armor plate, machine guns, rifle bullets, nitroglycerine or black powder, that you are already wondering if you prefer a Cadillac to a Lincoln. Piping times, at least on this side of the water, are just around the corner. For as sure as green grass grows, we are to see a continuation of the European war within 30 days. Wednesday's "putsch," in which adherents to the reigning political party of one nation assassinated the premier of another nation (an incident absolutely unique in history), all but dwarfs in pregnant possibilities a little incident which happened 20 years ago last month in Sarajevo. And the present tinder-heap of nationalistic rivalry, economic competition, and war preparedness, as compared with the situation in 1914, is beyond question just twice as inflammable. To all intents and purposes, middle Europe is already on fire. Before we see September, we shall see Germany, Austria and Italy in arms. Jugoslavia may push northward. The troops of Poland and Czechoslovakia will be on their borders, tense and nervous. Russia will mobilize. France will stand ready to seize the Saar, perhaps even the Rhine bridgeheads, at the first chance. Britain will wait—there is no immediate threat to the channel. And America——?

THEO. HALL.

Well, this prophecy has gone far enough. Who, from the broad view of the whole scene, will not agree with Nathaniel Peffer as he writes in the August Harper's (and must indeed have penned in May): "The moral and intellectual bankruptcy of liberalism in our time needs no demonstration. It is as obvious as rain and as taken for granted."

• • • •

"Liberalism" is a term worshiped fervently on one hand, acidly deprecated on another. By itself, it means nothing. But it happens to have been the watchword along with "progressivism," of scores of essentially humanitarian men who have hoped for and hymned two things—banishment of war and wide economic security. Those are by long odds the two chief and necessary ideals of the race.

To recognize, with one eye on Mr. Peffer's hard-biting article and another on the European headlines, that those ideals are at present "bankrupt" is not a matter to pour from your mind like tea leaves from a cup.

• • • •

You can do no better, if you would look into the reasons behind the liberal failure, than to read John Chamberlain's masterly and stimulating study—"Farewell to Reform: the Rise, Life and Decay of the Progressive Mind in America." John Day, $3.). It was written in 1932, published in a second edition with a new foreword in late 1933. But it is not a whit less important and relevant today. For the daily book reviewer of the New York Times, in analyzing 40 years of American men, books and parties, exposes the roots of that strange complexity, the idealistic and inefficacious liberal mind.

Mr. Chamberlain is as wise in his choice of authorities as he is in his own remarks. He quotes Harold Stearns' scarifying observation on the failure of liberalism caused by "the unwillingness of the liberal to continue with analysis once the process of analysis had become uncomfortable." He himself puts it: "Reformers can not stand prosperity."

Note his words, in his 1933 preface, on the Roosevelt program: "The 'reforms' of the New Deal will not lead to reform as it is carefully defined in this book; they will not help to maintain 'freedom of contract,' freedom from monopoly, freedom of competition. Rather do they bear out the book's thesis; they tend to congeal capitalism. In making this point once more, I note with some amusement that I stand both with Ralph West Robey, financial editor of The New York Evening Post (now The Post's financial columnist—T. H.) and with John Strachey, the English Marxist critic. In other words, both conservatives and radicals know how capitalism works; it is only the liberal, who has mistaken an adjective for a credo, that is deluded."

Or hear Mr. Chamberlain on an earlier, wider-reaching topic. Of the League of Nations he writes: "When antecedent economic conditions are taken care of, the resultant League may reflect eternal glory on Wilson. He may be the Copernicus of a new political system. But just because he began at the top, letting the foundations remain a matter of assumption, it is more than likely that uncouth Marxians and dirty Leninists will steal the ultimate credit from him in the Valhalla of future heroes."

• • • •

I've not been unintentionally sketchy in thus describing "Farewell to Reform," for I hope to pique you into opening a wise and witty book which all thoughtful Americans should know practically by heart.

Yet for all his understanding and incisiveness, Mr. Chamberlain never quite speaks out, as does Mr. Peffer. In the article already mentioned, the latter writes: "The failure of all the supposed efforts (at banishing war) since 1919 proves nothing. The point is that there have been no efforts. What has been so construed—the magniloquence, the rhetoric, the enunciation of formulas, the elaborate paraphernalia—has been either piffling or pretense and, therefore, futile."

My title for today's little homily may have struck you as ironic. Not at all. Liberalism today is triumphant and unconquered—in precisely the same sense that a foothill in the farthest uninhabited wastes of the Gobi Desert is unclimbable by man.

Japan Stays Oriental Under Western Mask

Customs of Modern Business Are Used in Competition for World Power, But Devils Are Still Scared Out of Homes by Scattering Beans.

By Maj. R. V. C. Bodley
(Special Correspondent of The Post).

TOKYO, July 26.—So much has been written about the Westernization of Japan that a general belief is growing up that the modern Japanese has lost most of his Oriental characteristics. This is by no means the case, for though the traveler, passing through Kobe, or the visitor remaining for some weeks in Tokyo, will only record impressions of concrete buildings, efficient railway services and European clothes, these are but outward signs of progress deemed necessary by the Japanese in order to compete with the rest of the world. Under the covering of Western bustle lies the old spirit of Japan with all her ancient customs dating from time immemorial.

A Japanese commercial magnate will occupy a sumptuous office with a magnificent desk, telephones, secretaries and all those appurtenances as seen on the cinema screen, but he will transact any important business squatting on the floor of a tea house. He will probably sign a contract in his office with the responsible head of the concern involved, but all the preliminaries of the transaction will have been carried out through intermediaries who may or may not be connected with the firms in question.

A foreigner who tries to adopt Western methods and approach the man with whom he wishes to do business direct will be received politely, but he will get no further. Even when dealing with government officials the object will be more rapidly achieved by sending a friend to see a subordinate than by calling on the head of the department in person. What is extraordinary is that with this tedious Oriental way of doing things the Japanese have not only succeeded in catching up with the European or the American, but are beating him at his own work.

Western Customs Left On Doorstep at Home.

A DIRECTOR of a Japanese firm will take a meal with a foreigner at a Westernized restaurant dressed in the latest London fashion, conforming, without apparent effort, to the methods of eating and the hour of dining, but the moment he has crossed the threshold of his house all things foreign will be forgotten. Leaving his shoes outside the door, he will cast coat, trousers and shirt aside and, having taken a bath, during the course of which the maid will have scrubbed his back, he will appear in kimona and squatting before a small table eat his Japanese dinner with chopsticks, at an hour which in Europe is associated with tea. He will sleep on a mattress laid out on the floor and, rising early in the morning, make his breakfast off rice, raw fish and soup. The wife, save in exceptional cases, will take no part in her husband's life outside the home and once he has left the house he will have to give her no account of what he has been doing. He may lunch out, dine out, go away for the week-end—all this has nothing to do with the family, his only responsibility being to supply his dependents with food, lodging and clothing.

Foreigners usually include the wives of government officials and other important men in their invitations, but no offense is caused if a married man is asked alone, even though foreign women may be present at the function, and it would never occur to a Japanese to ask the wives of his friends to a dinner at a restaurant. The geisha alone supply the female element at a truly Japanese party.

There are many foreign restaurants in Tokyo and other big centers well patronized by the Japanese, but the proportion of people who regularly indulge themselves in Western cooking is very small. One of the reasons is that of expense, as the cost of one Western meal is equivalent to a whole day's board on Japanese diet.

Newspapers Shut Up Shop at New Year's.

THERE are numbers of cinemas in the larger cities showing foreign films, but very many more where the pictures are entirely Japanese, and at the Kabuki Classical Theater it is necessary to book seats days in advance.

The Japanese year has 12 months and is outwardly Western as are other matters Japanese. Where there is a great difference is in the matter of holidays, for while there are a great number of national festivals, regular holidays, such as we know them, do not exist, except for students and schoolmasters. On Sundays, for instance, government offices and banks and a few of the more important business firms close, but all the shops and places of amusement stay open. The regular summer holidays to which the European or American feels himself entitled in Japan are more the exception than the rule. Those employes who are granted a fortnight's leisure during the course of the year usually spread their leave out, taking a few days every month. Heads of big business generally own villas at the seaside or in the mountains, to which they send their families during the hot weather, joining them for the week-ends; government officials have no fixed vacations, but have the privilege of not doing any work in the afternoon during July and August; factory hands have a certain number of days off during each month, but are not paid while absent from their duties.

The only time in the course of the year when there is a general relaxation is from January 1 to 9, when everything seems to come to a standstill. Newspapers are not even printed on certain days during this period, and it would be out of the question to try to transact any business, and nothing less than a national crisis would cause a government official to do more than his bare duties until New Year festivities are over.

During the course of each month there are a dozen or so festivals, varying in importance, which are observed by everyone regardless of calling or rank. It would be impossible to enumerate them all, but the following are the most important.

Scattering of Beans Routs Household Devils.

IN February all houses are purified of devils by the scattering of beans followed by the placing of sardines on the doorstep to prevent the devils from returning. This is also the month for the viewing of plum blossoms, and Japanese men and women from all stations in life travel great distances to visit some place famous for its plum trees. With the same veneration for the beauties of nature, millions of people leave their homes in April to contemplate cherry blossoms or in November to walk meditatively through forests of maple trees blood red in their autumn clothing, or to attend the chrysanthemum shows in public parks of the cities.

March sees the doll's or girl's festival and the end of the scholastic year, entailing the passing of examinations which is the aim and object of every Japanese student, male or female, the ability to answer examination questions being, in Japan, a proof of knowledge.

Th most important festival of April takes place on the 3d, when the whole nation commemorates the death of Jinmu Tenno, who founded the Japanese Empire 2,600 years ago and from whom is directly descended the present Mikado.

Labor day is celebrated on May 1 by a handful of proletarians, but so strict are the laws about Communist activities and so severe the penalties for indulging in "dangerous thought" that no one dares to make anything but the mildest speeches. The boy's festival on May 5 is given up to the practice of old time martial sports and the general encouragement of warlike spirit.

Ancestors Welcomed With Fires in July.

JUNE in Japan is intensely hot and unpleasantly damp; clothes become moldy and it is difficult to work in the stuffy atmosphere. River fishing with lines and cormorants opens and the fresh fish restaurants are thronged by gourmets. Parish gods are taken out of their temples and given excursions up and down the streets in gilded palanquins carried on the shoulders of their adherents.

On July 13 welcome fires are lighted at the entrance of every house in expectation of a visit from the ancestors of the family. These spirits of the dead are supposed to remain in their old homes until the evening of July 16, when they are dismissed with farewell fires.

During August all those who can escape from the tropical heat of the great cities go to the sea or the hills. There is an interesting festival on the Sumida River in Tokyo consisting of a Buddhist mass for the souls of those who have been drowned and the spirits of the fish which have been caught.

The death of Gen. Nogi is commemorated in September by pilgrimages to the house in which he and his wife committed harakiri. This is also the month for moon viewing parties. Boys and girls go out into the fields and collect bundles of a tall grass, called susuki which they then arrange in the casement in such a way that the moon glints through this artificial hedge.

Artists Cling to Ancient, Craft of Painting Silk.

IN October takes place the exhibition of pictures at the Imperial Academy of Art. Pictures of the European school are, for the most part, still in an undeveloped stage but the old-fashioned paintings on silk are masterpieces of delicate color and detail. While the exhibition remains open, the galleries are thronged from morning till night by people of all classes.

November 1 is the festival of books, which is a kind of farewell ceremony, as on the succeeding days all unwanted books are taken away in carts and sold by the weight! The birthday of the Emperor Meiji, who brought about the reformation of Japan and its opening to the West, is celebrated as a holiday on November 3. This month is also considered fashionable for weddings.

December is a very gay month. The shop windows glitter with their display of presents and along the pavements are little booths bright with toys, for it is interesting to note that the observance of Christmas day is almost universal in Japan and Father Christmas and Santa Claus are necessary adjuncts to a Japanese child's Christmas celebrations.

Japanese Enjoy Year's Full Round of Sports.

SPORTS, of course, have their appointed seasons in Japan as in the West. Football, skiing, skating in the winter, baseball, tennis, rowing in the summer, golf all the year round, with this difference, that the average Japanese makes a cult of his sports and practices them as a rite until he is as nearly expert as it is possible to be. Neither does he neglect his archery or his judo or other old-time physical exercises, and takes as much interest in Japanese wrestling as in Western boxing. In fact, in everything he does, work or play, he remains a mixture of contrast inexplicable to foreigners.

It must be further borne in mind that these people, who scare away devils with beans or spend hours in silent contemplation of a cherry tree or a moonrise, are not confined to the peasant class, which has had no contact with the West.

The observance of the festivals of the Japanese year is part of every one's life and, though one occasionally meets a young Japanese, lately educated abroad, scoffing at the old-fashioned ideas, in a very short time he loses his Western veneer and thinks again like an Oriental. Perhaps this is the reason why Japan is so successful.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Imaginary Interviews—No. 3,456. (With any famous picture actress.)

Q.—Have you read the charges that your salary is ridiculous?

• • • •

Q.—You misunderstand me; the criticism is that you are overpaid.

A.—So my boss has been talking again, eh!

• • • •

Q.—Do you know that you get more money than Roosevelt?

A.—What picture company is he with?

Q.—Listen, my dear; Franklin D. Roosevelt is President of the United States.

A.—I always meant to read those election returns, but somebody borrowed my paper. How's he going?

Q.—He's going very well, since you put it that way. But have you ever stopped to think that the President gets only $75,000 a year?

A.—If he's satisfied to waste his life in a job with no future, is it my fault?

• • • •

Q.—Is it true you get $2,500 a week in the movies?

A.—Yes, but why hold that against me? I'm doing all I can to get more.

Q.—Do you believe you are worth more than the President?

• • • •

Q.—Do you know that while you draw down all this money, thousands of people who invested savings in picture corporations can't get a dime in dividends?

Q.—They certainly do.

• • • •

Q.—So you don't fear a Federal inquiry into the movie business, eh?

Q.—How do you figure that out?

Q.—Why do you put it at 20 years?

Departure.

I did not realize how soon
The summer could be gone,
Until I saw her bridal veil
Of webs that spread the lawn.

Until an aster tide was deep
Along a country lane,
And plump, warm grapes were lacquered bright
By autumn's purple rain.

Fall will not go without farewell;
From burt-oak minarets,
A parting melody will sound
From leaf-brown castanets.

ROSE MYRA PHILLIPS.

An Oversight, Maybe.

The most surprising feature of the Dillinger matter is the fact that the shooting took place immediately, without the usual wait for the newsreel men.

The reaction of the movie theater men to the bandit's slaying is one of extreme sadness. They say business in picture houses is bad enough without shooting the customers.

Gentlemen Retain Standards and They Pay Dividends

By Robert Quillen

This is addressed to boys—to boys, say, of 15 or thereabouts, newly conscious of the way they look and beginning to feel a normal interest in girls.

One of that age recently was invited to dinner by an elderly lady who wished to know him better.

He made a good first impression. He was neat and bright and well built. But he had the manners of a hog.

When he desired anything across the table, he leaned forward and reached for it. And when he had finished eating, he muttered a casual "Well, I gotta go," and was gone without another word.

If you get your opinion of the world from the movies and "liberal" magazines and the novels of realists, you will conclude that gentleman and their standards are out of fashion. Even the word "gentleman" has lost favor and is seldom used in print without apology.

But you can't judge the relative worth of lions and foxes by asking foxes.

The movies and the public prints reflect the character and standards of individual writers. And these often present an untrue picture of the world because they are soured old cynics, embittered by their hurts, or youngsters who publicly ridicule the things they secretly honor lest they appear to be softies.

If movies were produced only by gentlemen, they would reflect the standards of gentlemen.

There are such standards still; make no mistake about that. There are men and boys who use clean speech; honor their word; respect women and cultivate good manners.

They aren't prigs. They are simply high-class men. And failure to discover them is simply a matter of being in the wrong environment.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

What Is Poetry?

A little girl defined it as a composition where every line begins with a capital letter. In former times that was indeed the only distinction between what was often called by its author poetry and what passed for prose. But in these latter days even that humble though obvious sign of demarcation has lost what value it once possessed. For there are some poets today who begin all the lines with small letters; this seems to me unfortunate, for now it is impossible to tell whether they are writing poetry or prose.

Real poets have never had to resort to unusual methods of printing their work in order to attract attention; the poetic qualities in their writings have been sufficient. Bizarre externals do not make a poet any more than long hair makes a pianist, or a velvet jacket a 'cello player, or a tablecloth-necktie proves a man is a painter. Something else seems required.

Milton gave three adjectives as essential to poetry: poetry must be Simple, Sensuous, Passionate. These three words certainly are characteristic of many great poems, but not of all. Donne's poetry is not simple; Wordsworth's poetry is usually not sensuous; De La Mare's is seldom passionate. Yet all three men wrote indubitable poetry.

Wordsworth defined poetry as Emotion Remembered in Tranquility. The more one considers this definition, the more impressive it is. How perfectly it applies to his own masterpiece, "Tintern Abbey!"

Macaulay, who seems never to have been a child, as he spoke mature language at the age of four, said that he who aspires to be a great poet must first become a little child. Perhaps that explains why we have so few great poets.

A. E. Housman, in his lecture delivered in 1933 at Cambridge, called "The Name and Nature of Poetry," said that the effect of poetry was emotional rather than intellectual; a combination of words might be without meaning and yet be great poetry. He gives illustrations.

He also said that the effect of great poetry is physical rather than mental. He mentions three physical reactions. Sometimes he has a spinal chill, sometimes a queer sensation in the pit of the stomach, sometimes his skin rises, like gooseflesh. He never dares to remember any great poetry while he is shaving. The last time he did that, his skin rose so that he cut himself.

Furthermore, he says it is words and not thoughts that make poetry. He gives these two translations of exactly the same idea, first from the Authorized Version of the Bible, second, from the Prayer-Book:

None of them can by any means redeem his brother,
Nor give to God a ransom for him.

But no man may deliver his brother; nor make agreement unto God for him.

Crowds Attend Church Reunion in Waynesboro

Waynesboro, Pa., July 26 (Spl.). The forty-fifth annual reunion of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia met today at Pen Mar Park near here. Several thousand attended the reunion services, the first assembly of these denominations since the union of the two churches in June.

Dr. Boyd Edwards, headmaster of Mercersburg Academy, spoke.

Pension Applications Exhaust County Fund

Cumberland, Md., July 26 (Spl.). Approval of 25 additional applications for old-age pensions, made yesterday by the Board of Allegany County Commissioners, practically exhausted the $15,000 appropriation in the county levy list. Applications previously granted by the board had reduced the fund to $2,800 before favoable action was taken on the additional requests.

The applications were recommended by Miss Esther Goodyear, Andres S. Dick and Joseph H. Vernay, case investigators for the County Welfare Board.

The National Gallery

HARRY HINES WOODRING, Assistant Secretary of War. As Assistant Secretary he has defended competitive contracts and appeared before grand jury on procurement methods. Former Democratic Governor of Kansas, he is close personal friend of James Roosevelt. Married to daughter of Senator Marcus Coolidge, of Massachusetts. Was bank president at 40, where he had been hired at 18, as janitor. Entered politics just before economic crisis. Unpretentious looking. Manner: dry.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Farm Convention Speakers Selected

Clarksburg, W. Va., July 26 (Spl.). Officers of the West Virginia Farm Bureau are planning for a large attendance at its annual convention August 13 and 14 at the State 4-H camp at Jacksons Mill.

Speakers listed on the program include Dr. Carl C. Taylor, recently appointed regional director for this territory of the Land Policy Section of the AAA; James B. McLaughlin, State commissioner of agriculture; J. O. Knapp, assistant director of agricultural extension at West Virginia University; Dr. F. D. Fromme, dean of the university college of agriculture, and a representative from the AAA in Washington. J. Frank Porter, president of the Tennessee Farm Bureau, will be the chief speaker at the annual banquet.

"How Can We Build a Better Farm Bureau?" will be the theme of this year's meeting.

Loudoun Aid Garden Director Files Report

Leesburg, Va., July 26 (Spl.).—One hundred and ninety-eight visits have been made to subsistence gardens in Loudoun County by the relief garden director, Mrs. C. M. Turman, according to a report just released.

Thirteen garden meetings have been held with an attendance of 162, at which practical instruction was given. Thirteen food preservation meetings were held with an attendance of 165. Seventeen food preservation demonstrations were given in homes, 141 office conferences with individual gardeners were held, 538 letters were written, and 131 homes visited in delivering seeds and giving instructions in pest control.

West Virginia Deposits Gain.

Charleston, W. Va., July 26 (Spl.). Deposits in 102 open State banks increased $9,500,000 from March 5 to June 30, according to the State Banking Department. They amounted to $105,700,000 June 30.

Virginia Roads Get U. S. Funds

$65,700 to Be Allocated Two Towns for Repairs to Highways.

Harrisonburg, Va., July 26 (Spl.). Rockingham and Harrisonburg will receive $65,700 for much-needed highway improvement under the allocation of Federal funds announced yesterday at Richmond by Virginia State Highway Commissioner Henry C. Shirley.

Harrisonburg will receive $15,700 for grading and paving the approach to the widened Valley pike at the northern city limits. Officials say this improvement is needed because the road narrows after it enters the city limits. Harrisonburg completed the southern approach at a cost of $20,000 two years ago.

The bridge over North River at Mount Crawford, 6 miles south of here, is to be replaced by a modern concrete structure costing $30,000. The old iron bridge, with its narrow two-way passage, has been the scene of many wrecks since the pike on either side was widened. This will be the last of the old iron bridges between Winchester and Staunton that need replacing.

Another $20,000 is allocated for the widening of the road from the Valley pike to Broadway. This highway is an artery for heavy traffic from West Virginia through Brock's Gap. The modern road is now complete on both sides of the State line. In the past year, the route has been extensively used by truck traffic from the west. It intersects with the Valley pike 12 miles north of Harrisonburg.

Events Scheduled For Carroll Fair

Westminster, Md., July 26 (Spl.). Sponsored for the second year by the Westminster Kiwanis Club, the program for the annual Carroll County Fair, to be held at Taneytown, August 14 to 18, inclusive, was made public today.

The opening day will see the crowning of the "Queen of Love and Beauty." Republican State candidates have been invited to attend on August 15, which also will be marked with a double wedding.

August 16 will be known as "Democratic Day." Farm horse team contests, an exhibition of the oldest automobiles in the county and a horseshoe pitching contest for the Carroll County championship will be held August 17.

A horse and pony show will be staged August 18. Running races and harness races are scheduled.

Where to Go and What to See at the Amusement Places in the Washington Area

A Night Club Explorer Gets Back Stage Facts First Hand

Slants on Personalities and Atmosphere That the Casual Patron Might Have Missed Found on Capital Tour.

By Kay Ware.

You may have lived in Washington ten days or ten years; you may know all the places of entertainment, or none of them. Yet, no matter how many or few you have frequented, there are little bits of backstage facts about the personalities and atmospheres you may have failed to discover.

To you, the Washingtonian, and you, the out-of-town visitor, we dedicate this column. It is for your information and curiosity. If, through reportorial snooping, we can find something new about the old, or something gay about the usual, we hope you will benefit.

• • • •

The Broadmoor Roof.

If you go to the Broadmoor Roof for dinner, don't take the elevator. The way to the roof is through the dining room. The manager says many people go scooting up in the lift, only to be brought down again and redirected.

Stepping out on the roof, the first impression is one of almost boundless space. Surrounded by Rock Creek's loveliest trees, the setting is ideal when there are things to be talked about in low whispers.

It has to be called a roof, because it is 50 feet too high above the ground to be called a terrace. A low wall marks the drop into the park. The wall is a fascination. Every one, before dinner or after, runs to the wall and looks down. Perhaps they are looking for the crickets, whose melancholy chirping is the only sound.

Brooke Johns took a look at the wall and named it "The wife exterminator." He said, "Just sit her on the wall and give her the elbow and say, 'My, my! She must have had too much to drink!'"

• • • •

Speedboating, taken in small parcels, puts a chill in a hot evening, and plenty of wind in the hair.

A fleet of speedboats at the tip of Hains Point are ready to make dashes down the river any evening. Cutting along, between the wind and the lights in the water, there isn't any city and there isn't any hot weather.

• • • •

Authentic Germany.

Things are to be seen and heard at the Lowenkeller. Happy Walker looks worried and tries hard to make everyone comfortable. Perhaps he's worried because he's been general manager only a few weeks. He says not.

The authenticity of the place is delightful. Waiters run around with steins of beer. You call one of them.

"Ja. Das Rheinland."

"Your clothes are authentic?"

Yes, he says emphatically. The short breeches are of deer skin. See? They're stiff with age and embroidery. They were his grandfather's. Breeches are handed down from generation to generation. They should never wear out.

Another waiter will make a rabbit for you by twisting a red and white checked napkin around his fingers. He'll say, "You have a cigarette?"

You give it to him, and he puts it in the rabbit's mouth, so the rabbit can have a smoke." But, in your delight and interest, you'll forget to notice he forgets to return the cigarette.

• • • •

Early Morning Golfing.

If golf is your brand of early worm, you're in good company, for 4:30 to 5:30 a. m. sees a fine company of early risers on the courses.

The Rock Creek course is specially cool and green, and you play through the park woods, since part of the natural hazards are laid there.

One warning—heavy shoes are a necessity. Dew is spread around the course to the point of lavishness. One enthusiastic golfer said recently that she played regularly at 5:30 last year and that her shoes didn't get dry all summer.

• • • •

New Place to Dine.

A new place to dine in town, with the earmarks of home, is Grayson House at 1851 Wyoming avenue. It used to be the Austrian Legation, but they ran out of Austrians. Then it was a convalescent home until they ran out of convalescents. Now there seems to be no danger of the supply of diners-out running thin.

• • • •

Child Dancer at Shoreham.

The lovely child who dances at the Shoreham is only 17 years old and travels with her mother, as the Russian ballet girls do. She is dainty and exquisite and lets her long dark hair hang over her shoulders when she dances. Eileen O'Conner, dancing as well as she does, might slip into the ballet shoes of a Pavlowa later on.

Two excellent dance teams make up the rest of the show. It is gratifying that the lady in the adagio wears a long graceful white satin dress. Most teams of this sort look uncomfortably chilly.

If you want to have a good view, stand on the steps that lead from the out-door lounge to the terrace. The performers are a little diminutive, it is true, but there is no necessity for dodging heads to glimpse feet.

Incidentally, the out-door lounge is a rare spot. Cool and balcony-like, it is a perfect place to sip a Martini if the temperature mounts at eventide. There is no cover charge, naturally the privileges of dancing are not included, but the floor show can be watched from an ideal location.

• • • •

Unsung Great Falls.

Perhaps you know that slightly nauseating wave that comes when someone mentions going to Niagara Falls. Or perhaps you're one of the people who enjoys saying, with manner, that you've never been there.

But the fact remains that if there weren't any tourists, and honeymooners and colored lights, and other debris, there is some very nice water at the Falls.

If you can collect enough water and rocks, and put them properly together, almost any falls is worth spending an afternoon or evening with.

And of all nubbed, slighted and unappreciated falls, the Great Falls just outside of Washington remain the most unsung. Especially the view from the north shore.

The simplest way to proceed is to go out Reservoir road until you come to the water and can't go any further by car. Then cross an arm of the river by a swinging bridge, that gives you all the sensations of going over a mountain gorge in a basket, but is actually perfectly able to carry your pet elephant.

You are now on an island, directly over the falls, and a short walk leads to the bank. If you're a nature lover in the best sense of the term, all that is necessary is to climb to a high vantage point where you can watch the water boil past, choose the softest rock for a seat and relax.

Anybody with an eye for water can watch the passing show for some hours and never see the same thing twice. At low tide there are more rapids than at high tide, more falls.

If you want a complete sample of country life, take along whatever is your idea of a picnic supper.

• • • •

A Signal for Pep.

It is amazing how the personality of one man can have so drastic an effect on the atmosphere of a place. When Pete Macias strolls up to the Powhatan roof about 10 p. m. the orchestra livens, the waiters smile, the guests beam.

Perched high above the noise of the streets, this roof is almost as New York-ish as a pent house. There's always a breeze, and they have to keep the tablecloths where they belong with clothespins. While you dance, watch the moths grow silver in the beam of the flood light that illumines the floor.

Perhaps it's the orange lights on the edge of the roof that make the sky seem so deeply blue. Maxfield Parrish would find his inimitable colors here.

• • • •

In Quest of Quiet?

At the end of a long day, a vacation in the country feels like Eden. All the effects can be gained, and an excellent dinner in the bargain, by taking a short drive across the District line in a number of different directions.

Brook Farm, for example, just over in Maryland, is a place to get all the quiet needed for the consumption of a Southern dinner. There is a collection of antiques rather better than the average, to help get the mind away from modern traffic jams. After dinner, there is a lawn full of deep grass under tall old trees, made especially for lying flat and counting the stars.

A color note is the color of the household pets and live stock—ducks, chickens and innumerable cats—they're all white.

• • • •

For men only: If you want to bang your fist on a leather-armed sofa and fill the conversation with explosives, the Willard's Round Robin is the place. Also, the Willard serves dry martinis that are worth remembering. Ladies uninvited.

Why doesn't some one open a cocktail room where unescorted ladies can go without looking silly?

Old Maryland Churches Planning Fete Sunday

Leonardtown, Md., July 26 (Spl.). Christ Church, Chaptico, will hold its annual festival, which includes dinner, supper and dancing, Saturday night. Christ Church is one of the oldest Protestant Episcopal churches in Maryland.

St. Francis Xavier Church, Newtown, also will hold its festival Saturday. This will be its tercentenary festival, the fetes dating from 1769.

West Virginian Hurt As Car, Motorcycle Hit

Charlestown, W. Va., July 26 (Spl.).—Edward Painter, resident of Mount Mission section, near here, was critically injured today when the motorcycle he was riding was struck by an automobile driven by Frank Jackson, also a resident of the same section.

Painter, about 45, was entering the main highway when the Jackson automobile rounded a curve and struck him.

League Plans Drive In Fall Campaign

Anne Arundel Group Will Ignore Both Parties.

Annapolis, Md., July 26 (Spl.).—The Better Government League of Anne Arundel County will take an active part in the fall election, according to a resolution passed by the executive committee last night.

With President Churchill Murray presiding, a resolution was passed in which the organization declares itself as favoring the best qualified candidates without regard to party affiliations. It also intimated that it may obtain nomination of candidates by petition where suitable candidates are not presented by the parties.

The Better Government League is waging a fight for the economical conduct of the county government.

Virginia Sportsmen Polled on Duck Season

Richmond, July 26. (A. P.).—Chairman Carl H. Nolting, of the State Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, has begun referendum of sportsmen and sportsmen's organizations in Virginia which will be of aid to the Federal Government in fixing the open season for duck shooting.

He sent to all organizations and individual sportsmen on the commission's list a copy of a letter yesterday from the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Biological Survey, which seeks advice as to opening and closing dates of the Virginia migratory bird open season.

2 Swim Mile to Safety From Burning Vessel

Norfolk, Va., July 26. (Spl.)—Jennis Spencer and Ernest Brown, skipper and engineer, respectively, of the gasoline freight boat Margaret Brown, were forced to jump into the Atlantic off Ocracoke Island last night when their craft caught fire.

The ship was about a mile and a quarter off shore and the men swam that distance to safety. Capt. Spencer said the engine backfired, causing an explosion. The boat was enveloped in flames in less than a minute. The craft was loaded with produce, all of which was lost. The vessel was valued at about $3,000 and the produce at $1,000.

Low-Down on the High Spots For All Amusement Seekers

Arthur Godfrey will be the headliner at Club Michel next week. His engagement is indefinite. Will the club supply him with phonograph records to smash?

Devotees of Chevy Chase Lake look forward to the appearance of Morton Downey tonight. A one-night engagement followers of radio-stars-in-person should not miss.

The dancing copy boy, Archie Hawk, will be at the Hangar Club next week. The management of the club is proud, since they "discovered" him.

Overheard at the Shoreham terrace: "You've met Arthur Godfrey? Tell me what he's like. I've heard that he's—" a greedy breeze blew the rest away . . . BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

While Sallie Cat Sleeps.

You all remember how a bear loves honey. And you have heard a good deal about the times when Blackie had plenty of honey, and of other times when he got in trouble while he was trying to get it.

It had both a good while since Blackie had any honey, and so his sweet tooth was teasing him, and he said he just had to do something about it. "Go over to Aunt Lindy's house, Jay Bird, and see how her crop of honey is getting along, and see if all those cats are still there. Maybe she has given some of them away since they got grown, for I don't see how she could feed so many cats, and I know there are not enough rats around her place to keep half a dozen cats busy catching them."

Jay Bird hadn't been about Aunt Lindy's place since he came back from the mountains, and he was surprised to see how much there was on the farm that all of them could eat. There was a great big pear tree that was right full of pears, and they were getting just as yellow as the sun. And that meant that they were getting as sweet as honey. And Jay Bird just loved nice ripe pears. And grapes! The vines were full of them, and they were so ripe that they were falling all over the ground. And sugar cane was ripe, too, and there was no cane at the house of any body else. Then Jay Bird flew to the back porch to see if all the cats were there. No sir, there was just Sallie Cat right by herself, and she was fast asleep in the sun. Aunt Lindy must have given away all the kittens when they got to be big cats for there was not a one of them there. And now to look at the bee gums. Jay Bird hadn't seen a soul about the house, and he thought that Aunt Lindy and her boy Tom had both gone to town; but he was mistaken, for when he got around to the back of the garden he found both of them working around the bee gums. You know folks have regular two or three story houses built for the bees, these days, with a lot of little rooms in each story, so when the bees fill one room full of honey you just take out one room full and put an empty back, and let the bees fill it.

You don't have to smoke the bees to death with sulphur like your grandfather did before he learned how to fix the little rooms for the bees to put honey in. Well Aunt Lindy and Tom were taking out these little rooms all full of honey and putting empty ones back in their places when Jay Bird got there, and he was sure he never had seen so much honey in his life.

After a while Aunt Lindy told Tom that they had as much honey as they could take to town tomorrow, and so they would leave the rest till some other time. And what do you reckon is going to happen tomorrow? Well, here's what did happen. Aunt Lindy and Tom went to town with honey and eggs and other things, and Blackie Bear and Jocko Monkey and Jay Bird went to Aunt Lindy's home and got a lot of honey out of the three-story bee gums, besides a lot of nice juicy pears and some grapes and apples, while she was gone.

And Sallie Cat was so sound asleep that she didn't even hear Blackie laugh when he passed by the house and licked out his red tongue at her.

School Work Contracts Let

Montgomery Committee Makes Awards at Rockville.

Contracts for additions to Montgomery County school buildings at Gaithersburg, Woodside and Poolesville were awarded yesterday at a meeting of the award committee of the board of education in Rockville, Md.

F. H. Kahn, of Rockville, was the lowest bidder for the four-room addition to the Gaithersburg High School, to be completed within 90 working days at a cost of $26,769. Willard Warthen, of Kensington, was second bidder, with $27,370.

Warthen's bid of $20,150 for remodeling the kitchen and cafeteria and adding to and remodeling the heating plant of the Woodside Elementary School within 80 working days was accepted over Kahn's estimate of $20,550.

Warthen also received a contract for construction of a two-room addition to the Poolesville Elementary School within 70 working days at $8,880. Kahn was second with $8,966 on this job.

Frank B. Proctor, supervisor of school property, said yesterday that construction on all three buildings was expected to start at once.

Thomas C. Darby, of Dawsonville, president of the board of education; Edwin W. Broome, of Rockville, superintendent of education; George P. Sacks, of Bethesda; George W. Davis, of Silver Spring, and Proctor were present at opening of bids.

Body of Coty Will Lie In State for Three Days

Louveciennes, France, July 26. (A. P.)—The body of Francois Coty, who died last night of pneumonia at the age of 60, will by his own wish lie in state for three days here in his chateau built for Mme. Dubarry, favorite of Louis XV.

The public will be permitted to view the body of the perfumer and former newspaper publisher until Saturday, when it will be buried temporarily at Louveciennes.

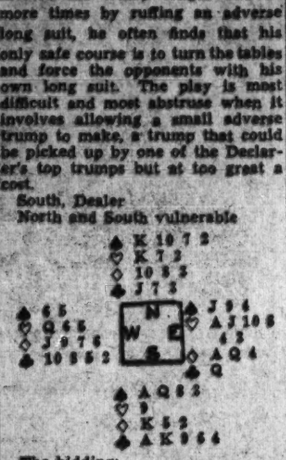
Perfect Diagnosis.

In the play of a trump contract in which Declarer is forced to shorten his trump length one or more times by ruffing an adverse long suit, he often finds that his only safe course is to turn the tables and force the opponents with his own long suit. The play is most difficult and most abstruse when it involves allowing a small adverse trump to make, a trump that could be picked up by one of the Declarer's top trumps but at too great a cost.

South, Dealer
North and South vulnerable



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1NT	2♡
2♠	Pass	3♣	Pass
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

In this deal the South cards were played by Jack Weisman of New York City, one of the younger generation of excellent card players. West opened the Queen of hearts and South trumped the second round of the suit. It was evident that the club suit must be established, and if a trick must be lost to the Queen, it had best be given up before trumps were led. South therefore cashed the Ace of clubs and when East dropped the blank Queen, Declarer was faced with a pretty problem.

With West marked for a club stopper, it was useless to take out the adverse trumps and continue the club suit inasmuch as this play would leave South defenseless against a heart continuation at the time West gained the lead with his club stopper. Even though the King of diamonds would undoubtedly provide the South hand a reentry—East's bid apparently marking him with the diamond Ace—Declarer would lose too many tricks by this process.

South studied the hand as a double-dummy problem in which all that was known of the adverse hands was West's club stopper and East's diamond Ace. He solved the problem in this clever manner:

South cashed the Ace and Queen of trumps, leaving one trump at large. He then led a small club to the Jack. East trumped and could do no better than to lead a top heart, forcing out South's last trump. But Declarer, by his foresight in allowing the adverse trump to win, had retained in Dummy the vital two trumps necessary for his plan. North was now able to ruff the fourth lead of clubs, finally establishing the suit, and a diamond lead toward the King assured eventual reentry to South's fifth club at a time when the North hand still held a trump to stop the adverse heart suit.

It was pointed out by Mr. Weisman after the hand that the object in cashing the two trumps from the South hand and leaving North with the spade King and Ten was as follows:

If it develops that West has four trumps to the Jack, the contract can still be made if West also holds a third heart. In this event South will continue with the King of clubs and a club lead to North's Jack, and will then be assured of winning three tricks in clubs, one in diamonds, four trump tricks in the South hand (since South can not be prevented from getting another heart ruff) and the last two trumps in Dummy by automatic pick-up, making in all the ten tricks necessary for the four-spade contract.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South, Dealer
North and South vulnerable

The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy.

If you have trouble with too frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints every day and get rid of 4 pounds of waste matter, your body will take up these poisons causing serious trouble. It may knock you out and lay you up for many months. Don't wait. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS . . . a doctor's prescription . . . which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and help to wash out the 15 MILES of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs or so-called "kidney cures" that claim to fix you up in 15 minutes, for they may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS . . . the old reliable relief that contain no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934. Foster-Milburn Co.

How to Keep Well

Rheumatism in Childhood.

Many of us are shocked when we learn of the sudden death from heart disease of some relatively young man or woman. Few persons realize that the disease condition that brought on the sudden heart failure probably originated in childhood. Infections essentially rheumatic in character that may damage the heart are much more common in children than is generally understood, the preponderance of these infections occuring between the ages of 5 and 9 years. The incidence of the disease is increased by fatigue, loss of sleep, and insufficient or improper food. All these factors have to do with the child's resistance.

Because of our knowledge of the relation between rheumatic infection and heart disease parents should be on the alert to detect early symptoms that need to be investigated. Does the child tire easily or does he complain of physical exhaustion? If he is unusually cross this symptom must be carefully interpreted, as fatigue sometimes shows itself as increased irritability. Is he gaining weight normally? If not, or if there is a loss of weight, look for the cause.

Children normally have a good color. Pallor may be quite noticeable in children with infections. This may not be a true anemia. On the other hand, rheumatic infections have a tendency to destroy many of the red cells of the blood. A drop in the number of red cells or in the red coloring matter of the blood must not be disregarded.

The lining of the heart (endocardium) is thin and quite susceptible to infection. It is upon this lining that infections from other parts of the body may fasten themselves and cause a varying amount of permanent damage, particularly to the leaflets of the heart valves. Long before any sign of heart disease is detectable the patient may have shown positive signs of rheumatism. There may have been muscle pains (sometimes erroneously called growing pains), and painful swollen joints, with a rise in temperature. After some little time, if this condition continues, we may expect some heart involvement in a fair percentage of cases.

The rather generous supply of lymph tissue which the child possesses, such as tonsils and adenoids, oftimes constitutes a fertile soil for the development of infection. Decaying teeth and sinus infections probably play as important a role. If foci of infection can be found their removal or drainage will usually bring about complete recovery. If the difficulty is recognized early, proper management will greatly lessen heart damage.

If the heart has actually become involved in childhood, rest in bed is indicated until all the acute rheumatic and heart symptoms have subsided. The heart is so responsive to work placed upon it that it will endeavor to compensate should the heart valves be injured. By this we mean that the heart may enlarge somewhat and the muscle of the pumping chambers actually thicken. A heart murmur does not mean a life of invalidism. On the contrary, many persons with this condition live normal and productive lives to full expectancy. The danger lies in the possible harboring of bacteria in the tiny deposits on the heart valves brought about by the infection.

While rheumatic infection in children is fairly common, yet with proper hygienic measures and the removal of the source of infection the child will escape heart damage in most cases. Prevention of infection means prevention of rheumatism, and this means the saving of what would otherwise be damaged hearts.

Many Possible Causes.

L. G. B. writes: At intervals I experience a dry, parched feeling at the end and sides of the tongue, accompanied by an excessive flow of saliva. Perhaps I might say the sensation is similar to that one experiences after scalding the tongue. There is also a salty, bitter taste.

Reply.

Among the possible causes are dental work in which more than one metal was fastened in the mouth, pellagra, pernicious anemia, Hunter's anemia, foul mouth and tongue.

Examination would be required to find out which is the cause in your case.

Weight.

1. How much should a girl 14½ years old and 4 feet 11 inches tall weigh?

2. A girl 16 years old, 4 feet 11½ inches tall?

3. A woman 35 years old, 5 feet tall?

4. A man 42 years old, 5 feet 4 inches tall?

Reply.

1. About 98 pounds.
2. About 105 pounds.
3. About 119 pounds.
4. About 135 pounds.

Coast Guard Officer Victim of Pickpocket

Commander Stanley V. Parker, United States Coast Guard, told police yesterday his pocket had been picked of a purse containing $30 and valuable papers.

He missed the wallet after leaving a drug store at Eighteenth and G streets northwest, Commander Parker said. He gave police the description of a man who bumped against him as he entered the store.

THE BLOWLESS BATTLE!
-Rockaway Beach, L.I., 1927-

Fight history records no stranger bout than that fought between Al White and Danny Shugrue, at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, New York, in August, 1927. Although neither fighter struck a blow during the entire bout, both were knocked down, and one was knocked out, according to Nick Fiorio, well-known trainer. Shugrue, who was knocked out, had to be carried from the ring and was revived in his dressing room. White went down, but recovered in time to win the bout.

The fight was all over in a few seconds. Both boxers sprang from their corners at the sound of the first gong. They met in midring, led violently with rights—and both missed. Their heads came together with a resounding smack, and both hit the canvas. Shrugue was out cold. White, though dazed, struggled to his feet to learn that he was the victor.

Fractional currency was issued by the Government in 5 cent, 10 cent, 15 cent, 25 cent and 50 cent denominations to relieve the shortage of small change during Civil War days. During the early part of the war coins of all kinds were withdrawn from circulation and hoarded by people all over the country. The shortage of coins brought about the use of postage stamps, tokens issued by private individuals, due bills, tickets, and other forms of "shin plasters." The Government finally issued almost $50,000,000 worth of fractional currency which remained in circulation for a number of years.

"Whom the Gods Destroy," Starring Walter Connolly, Reviewed at RKO-Keith's

A Sturdy Play Harks Back to Jannings' Day

By Nelson B. Bell.

"WHOM THE GODS DESTROY," Columbia Pictures filmization of a story by Albert Payson Terhune, adapted to the screen by Fred Niblo, jr., starring Walter Connolly, supported by Doris Kenyon, Robert Young, Henry Kolker, Gilbert Emery, Hobart Bosworth and the Yale Puppeteers. Directed by Walter Lang. Reviewed Wednesday afternoon.

There is distinctly the flavor of the old days of the silent cinema hovering about this initial screen starring vehicle for the able talents of Walter Connolly.

"Whom the Gods Destroy" is reminiscent in subject matter and treatment of the sort of thing that admirable, but almost forgotten, German character actor, Emil Jannings, used to do. In fact, it might easily have been patterned after "The Sins of the Fathers"—or vice versa.

Mr. Connolly is cast as a distinguished writer and producer of plays, who, following an overwhelming Broadway triumph, boards ship for Europe, leaving his charming wife and precocious small son in New York. A shipwreck, quite obviously suggested by memories of the Titanic disaster, gives rise to the belief that John Forrester, after surrendering his lifebelt to a woman passenger, died a hero.

What he really did was surrender to the cowardice of a moment of panic and reach safety in a fisherman's shack on the rugged coast of Newfoundland by donning feminine attire and taking a place in a lifeboat supposed to be exclusively for women and children.

Doomed to Anonymity.

From that day on, he never dared reveal the fact of his survival or communicate with his family. He watched them avidly and pathetically from afar, however, and when his son, through lack of application and the will to face incessant and bitter drudgery, promised to become an utter failure as a playwright and producer, he came anonymously to his rescue and piloted him to such success as he, himself, in his day had known. At the very end, the action veers from the career of the son to a scene of some sentimental interest between the husband and the wife who had cherished his memory for a score of years.

This, as may be seen at a glance, is not a play of gayety and lightheartedness. It is, on the contrary, a drama of seriousness and substance which derives its greatest values from the splendid performance given its stellar role by Mr. Connolly.

The defeatist's point of view is not new to Mr. Connolly. He encountered it in "No More Orchids," "Paddy, the Next Best Thing," and even, in modified degree, in "Twentieth Century." To the role of the harassed, middle-aged man, confronted by a great difficulty, he brings no less authority, naturalness and conviction than Herr Jannings was wont to do—even to the beard that aids in disguising a face and personality that surely a vast number of people would have identified, except for the necessities of dramatic climax.

Doris Kenyon Miscast.

In the role of the wife, Doris Kenyon is happily cast only in the early scenes, before sorrow and a wide span of years have overtaken her. Miss Kenyon is a vivacious and charming young actress, who does not grow old with the skill of some others on the screen. Robert Young as the son, grown to maturity and the brink of failure, is not too good. Hobart Bosworth has another benign character to impersonate as the kindly fisherman who rescued the renegade Forrester and then kept his secret from the world. Scotty Beckett, as the son at the age of 4, adds another precocious actor to the list of capable juvenile players. The remainder of the cast are of minor importance.

The shipwreck and Newfoundland scenes are executed with all of the overstressed realism characteristic of the remote era of the silent picture, with a similarly characteristic dereliction on the part of the director in filming these ostensibly exciting scenes on an "ocean" as smooth as a mill pond.

The feature is supplemented by a Clark and McCullough comedy, "Odor in the Court," that is not as funny as it should be; "Eyes on Russia," a tour from the Caucasus to Moscow, by Miss Bourke-White, whose voice and action are exceedingly poor; an Aesop Fable, "Fiddlin' Fun," and an issue of the newsreel specializing in gruesome close-ups of the bullet-riddled body of the late John Dillinger lying in the morgue in Chicago.

That broadcast through WMAL Friday night of "Murder in the Red Barn," the sensationally successful old English melodrama being presented by the Roadside Theater group in their "barn" theater out at Halpine, Md., will not, after all, be of the entire play. The broadcast will begin at 10:15 p. m., and will continue until the final curtain. Announcer McGrath will outline the story that has gone before, so that the continuity will be intelligible to the listeners-in. The curtailment in the duration of the broadcast was occasioned by a persistent belief on the part of those primarily concerned that the earlier acts of the play do not constitute ideal radio material from the viewpoint of those sitting before the loudspeakers. The action is picked up with the commission of the murder in the red barn, and from then on is thoroughly exciting.

Moon Over Mountain?

Beginning next Monday and continuing for a week, nightly at 9, the special attraction in the Spanish Garden ballroom out at Glen Echo Park, will be Dean Alexander, billed as the "sweet singing sophomore of George Washington University."

It is just barely possible that this might convey a slightly erroneous impression of precisely what Dean Alexander is like. Mr. Alexander is a young man who stands 6 feet and 1 inch off the ground and weighs 195 pounds. In the season, he utilizes all this brawn as a regular full back on the G. W. football team. During the summer he is a brakeman on the roller coaster out at Glen Echo.

Many will recall that years ago one of radio's outstanding personalities made one of her first professional appearances during a similar engagement in the Glen Echo Ballroom. That was Kate Smith before her downtown theatrical engagements or regular appearances with the Crandall Saturday Nighters, the old Crandall broadcast unit, taking the air through WRC. The records indicate that Kate sang "Yearning," "Yes, Sir, She's My Baby" and "When You and I Were Seventeen" as her principal numbers out at Glen Echo.

Perhaps this engagement of Dean Alexander will launch him on a career of equal anxiety to pull a moon over a mountain, or something.

Reverting momentarily to the Roadside Theater, the continuation of the run of "Murder in the Red Barn" throughout the current week has occasioned the postponement of Douglas Griesemer's manuscript play, "Welcome to His Excellency," from July 31 to August 7, when it will be presented for the first time on any stage as a Broadway "try-out."

Two More Capital Stars.

It is the helpful Miss Ruth Barnard who apprises me that Washington now can claim another star of the Terpsichorean art in the person of Jack Rees, who, in association with Joyce Coles, is headlining this week's bill on the Terrace of the Shoreham Hotel.

Although Mr. Rees was born in Paris, he was graduated from Georgetown University here, and his brother, Edward Rees, won his medical degree from the same institution this year. Jack Rees while atending Georgetown was a member of the Washington Opera Co.

Joyce Coles studied dancing with Lisa Gardiner in Washington several years ago and toured the Orient with Miss Gardiner when both were members of the Pavlowa Co.

The engineers in charge of the cooling systems operating in the downtown motion picture theaters reported yesterday to be the worst day of the summer for the maintenance of comfortable temperatures, due to the excessive humidity. The plants "wet bulbs" were at the highest point reached so far this summer.

Christopher Columbus Note.

Some of us made the discovery along about midafternoon without the aid of an engineer!

Two Win Scholarships.

Hagerstown, Md., July 26 (Spl.). Miss Lillian Moore was awarded a scholarship to Western Maryland College and Jack H. Bushong, Breathedsville, Washington County, a scholarship to St. John's College, according to an announcement made yesterday by the board of education.

Two Favorites Soon to Be Seen

Straight From the Studios

Owner Riddle Denies Man o' War to Picture Industry; O'Sullivan-Farrow Match Is Guessing Game; Hollywood People and Events.

By Speed Kendall.

His owner, Samuel Riddle, turned thumbs down on an offer from the Paramount Studio. A wire from Riddle today said:

ALICE BRADY

Director Marshall Neilan is in search of the best blooded horse he can get for the filming of "The Lemon Drop Kid." Lee Tracy will play the lead in the picture, which is based on the life of a race track tout.

There is an important niche in the play for an outstanding race horse. The publicity possibilities would be unlimited with such a horse as Man o' War. He is 18 years of age and retired. His life is now devoted to developing race horse posterity. The earnings for this are thousands of dollars yearly. His stake winnings were more than a quarter of a million dollars.

Bringing a blue-blooded animal to Hollywood would be a gigantic task, as well as an extreme risk. True, insurance can be obtained, but legal experts ventured the opinion the studio would be liable, in adidtion, in the event of death.

Decide For Yourself.

You can use your own judgment on this. Dame Rumor still persists that Maureen O'Sullivan, the Irish colleen, and Writer John Farrow were married three months ago in Mexicali, Mexico. As persistently they deny it. If they did marry they certainly put one over, hiding the records.

Ten times Miss O'Sullivan has started for Ireland to visit her father and mother, Farrow to go with her to get parental blessings, they say, before marriage. She hasn't seen her parents in four or five years. Each time a new picture assignment postponed her departure.

Positively, she said yesterday, they will leave Wednesday by train, plane or boat. Besides getting married abroad, if they already are not, there is a chance of Farrow directing her in a picture in London.

Fashion Note For Fall.

Who could there be better than Miriam Hopkins to furnish some inside on fall fashions? She just got back from New York with a trunk full of hats and gowns.

In chapeaus the beret type will be smart, with much more fullness than the old styles. They will be worn over the left eye, with much fullness toward the front. All hats scoop forward; nothing is draped off the face.

Miriam says lines have not changed much. The waist line is normal, but with a little exaggeration, the frocks clinging to the figure in natural folds. Plaids for the street will be seen, the materials being woolens of subdued colors. High necklines in dinner dresses will be smart. Sleeves are extreme. The back of the gown is the most important part. Smart frocks all have some individual line or cut in the back, in opposition to the plain fronts and bodices.

Odd and Interesting People and Events.

Alice Brady says she saw this on a theater marquis: 'No More Women" "Stand Up and Cheer" . . . Reginald Denny was eating eandy in a scene in "The Richest Girl in the World," and bit into the end of Fay Wray's lipstick by mistake . . . Una Merkel is discarding her plans for a Honolulu vacation for a trip to New York . . . A fan in Porto Rico wrote Ricardo Cortez and asked him to please send him two saxophones . . . Claire Dodd is an expert bowler . . . Rex Lease was signed by Consolidated Films for six pictures instead of one . . . Walt Disney (Mickey Mouse) and Mrs. Disney, guests at Lake Arrowhead Lodge . . . Director Phillip Moeller of Radio Pictures has a stooge who carries his chair around for him on the set . . . Raquel Torres is seriously considering a personal appearance in Buenos Aires . . . Carol Tevis has lost her dog, and promises two pups in return to the finder . . . Cupid has a rough time competing with films. Gloria Staurt and Writer Arthur Sheekman were all set to be married Thursday. Then Sheekman was called on to write a new sequence for Eddie Cantor's "Kid Millions," and now the nuptials date is uncertain.

New Offerings Are Announced For Next Week

Stage and Screen Programs Compete With Parks in Midsummer Heat.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

That charming and ingenuous youngster, Shirley Temple, who should not be presented with such frequency as to outwear her welcome, will be the pictured screen star at Loew's Fox Theater for the week beginning tomorrow in "Baby Take a Bow," a Fox production in which Jimmie Dunn plays opposite the diminutive star with whom he scored such a hit in "Stand Up and Cheer." The stage bill will be headlined by Phil Harris and his orchestra, one of the most skillful organizations of its kind before the public. Other acts will be offered by Charlie Foy and company in 15 minutes of fun; Sammy Lewis and Patty Moore in dances and comedy, and France and Lapell, gymnasts. The bill will be completed, as usual, by the Fox Movietone News and orchestral overture under the baton of Max Zinder, in the vacation absence of Phil Lampkin.

• • • •

Richard Barthelmess returns to the screen at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater for the week beginning Friday in "Midnight Alibi," a picturization of a story by Damon Runyon, whose "Lady for a Day" and "Little Miss Marker" have been hits. In this subject the star will be supported by Ann Dvorak, who has been absent from the local screens even longer than Barthelmess. The stage bill will be headlined by Hal LeRoy, youthful dancing star, assisted by Barbara MacDonald. Others on the bill are the Three Stewart Sisters in sophisticated rhythms; Don Cummings, the dude cowboy; the Four Cards in "A Game of Skill," and Hall and Dennison, tunesters. The program will be augmented by Universal News and Freddie Clark's orchestral contributions.

• • • •

One of the late Edgar Wallace's most baffling mysteries will supply the basis of plot unfolded in "The Return of the Terror," chief feature of the bill announced for next week, beginning Friday, at the Metropolitan Theater. Roles of importance in this picture are assumed by Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot, John Halliday and Frank McHugh, supported by Robert Barratt, George E. Stone, Irving Pichel, Robert Emmett O'Connor and numerous others. The complementary program will embrace a full newsreel, Ben Pollack and his orchestra in a musical novelty; a Ben Blue comedy, "Prize Sap;" Jeanne Aubert and Weldon Heyburn in "The Mysterious Kiss," a song cartoon and a Newman Traveltalk.

• • • •

A strange maze of drama, mystery and romance laid against the eeriest of backgrounds is what is promised in "Murder in Trinidad," chief screen feature of the bill announced for the week beginning tomorrow at the Columbia Theater. This Fox production is based on a Crime Club story that was deemed one of the best of its year. Nigel Bruce, Heather Angel and Victor Jory are cast in the principal roles. Supplementing the feature will be shown a varied assortment of short sound subjects and the latest issue of the Paramount Sound News.

• • • •

"Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back," starring Ronald Colman, supported by Loretta Young, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Warner Oland and a numerous cast, will be continued through a second week, beginning tomorrow, as foremost screen feature at Loew's Palace. A diverting Walt Disney "Mickey Mouse" cartoon comedy, short subjects and the Metrotone News are auxiliary attractions.

• • • •

Dean Alexander, "the sweet singing sophomore" of George Washington University, will be presented as a special added attraction in the Spanish Garden ballroom at Glen Echo Park the week of July 30. In addition to this offering, all of the resort's 50-odd amusement devices will be in full operation, including the Crystal Pool, one of the finest and most completely equipped in the country; the Midway, the Dodgem Rides and the roller coaster. Admission to the park is free.

Free dancing three nights a week continues to attract more and more visitors to the bayside ballroom at Seaside Park, down at Chesapeake Beach, Md. This free dancing is on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, to the music of a 5-piece section of Frank Flanigan's Southerners. Some of the most recently released motion pictures are being shown at Seaside on Tuesday and Thursday nights. These hot summer days and evenings are keeping the huge salt water pool filled with bathers.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

RUSH HOUR TRAFFIC JAM

THE old car circled in the picture above has given a final cough and died at the critical point . . . during the five o'clock rush hour . . . at one of the busiest corners in the city. After a hundred indignant horns have tooted for ten minutes or so, he will be towed off to a garage . . . to pay for towing and repairs . . .

WHY run this risk . . . or endanger the lives of yourself and your family . . . driving a worn-out car? Especially when representative auto dealers offer fine used cars every day . . . at reasonable cost. To invest in a dependable car is to invest in peace of mind . . . security.

Camping Trip Planned by Couple to Canada.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Following closely on the heels of the announcement of the marriage of Mr. Robert Russell Dickey, jr., and Mrs. Evelyn Huffman Patterson, which took place in Dayton, Ohio, on Sunday, comes another announcement of equal interest to Capital society, that of the marriage of Mrs. Leila Gordon Dickey to Mr. Newbold Noyes.

The marriage took place yesterday in New York at 12:30 o'clock in the First Presbyterian Church, the assistant pastor of the church, the Rev. David O. Kendall, officiating. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a small group of friends of the couple, including Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Larrabee, of Warrenton, Va., and Washington, who were, respectively, best man and matron of honor.

Wears Chiffon Gown.

The bride wore an afternoon frock of printed chiffon with a large straw hat and a corsage of orchids and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Larrabee was also in a printed afternoon frock.

The present Mrs. Noyes is a daughter of Mrs. George Barnett and the late Mr. Basil Gordon, of Washington, and a sister of Mrs. Henry Suydam, the former Miss Anne Gordon. She was divorced from Mr. Dickey last month in Reno.

Mr. Noyes is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brett Noyes, also of Washington, and his marriage to Mrs. Alexandra Ewing Noyes was terminated by divorce last March.

Plan Trip to Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Noyes plan to go to Canada, where they will remain several weeks camping in the Canadian woods. Basil Gordon Dickey, Robert Russell Dickey 3d, Leila Sinclair Dickey and Peter Dickey, children of Mrs. Noyes, are with Mrs. Noyes' mother, Mrs. Barnett, at her Virginia estate, Wakefield, and Mr. Noyes' three boys Newbold Noyes, jr., Crosby Stuart Noyes and Thomas Ewing Noyes, are in Washington and all of them will join Mr. and Mrs. Noyes for a holiday later in the summer.

The newly married couple will return to Washington in October to make their home. Mrs. Noyes has been spending several weeks with her mother in Virginia.

Mrs. Joseph Leiter To Inspect Home

Mrs. Joseph Leiter arrived in Washington yesterday from her summer home, Edgewater House, at Beverly Farms, Mass., for a brief stay in the Capital. Mrs. Leiter will inspect the renovations on the Leiter Mansion on Dupont Circle which she plans to open the middle of September.

Mrs. Leiter has not occupied her home for the past two winters, and as she has always said that she wished her daughter, Miss Nancy Leiter, to make her debut in this house, many are speculating as to whether or not young Miss Leiter, who is of debutante age, will be added to the list of debutantes for the coming season. Mrs. Leiter has not announced as yet whether this is true or not.

Italian Attache to Leave August 6

It is with great regret that Capital society hears of the departure of Lieut. Col. Marco Pennaroli, Military Attache of the Italian Embassy. Col. Pennaroli has been in Washington for the last four years, having succeeded Brig. Gen. Augusto Villa, and is among the most popular bachelors of the Diplomatic Corps.

Col. Pennaroli will leave Washington on August and will sail for Europe aboard the Saturnia August 11. He will rejoin his regiment in Italy shortly after his arrival in his homeland. No successor has been named to Col. Pennaroli.

Daytime Chic Means Simplicity; Evening a Time for Frivolity

Fashionable Ladies Will Go Dancing in Clothes That Are Frankly Artificial, Full of Glitter and Period Influences.

Classical lines predominate in daytime dresses designed for next fall, but evening gowns show a trend toward artificiality. Today's is the second of three features on fall style trends.

NEW YORK, July 26 (AP).—The outline of fashion for fall, seen in the collections of designers, is a story of simple, wearable clothes, with some startling departures for evening.

Daytime dresses are simple, "classical," almost streamlined, perfect clothes for busy modern women. A fillip is added by the large, rakish beret, a la Rembrandt or Goya.

For afternoon, there are dresses on the same casual, simple lines, but made of rich materials.

And for evening, frank artificiality is the mode. There will be lots of glitter. A hard, shiny synthetic material that drapes like a lump of anthracite is favored by some designers.

Evening Silhouette Fancy.

While the daytime silhouette is much the same as last season's, with skirts a bit shorter and a complete absence of doodads and tricks, the evening silhouette may be very fancy. One may look like a Russian Empress, a Puritan, or Charlotte Corday.

The prevailing evening silhouette will be slim in the middle, with fullness above or below. But one designer for a smart house is putting out "nightgown" evening dresses, sophisticatedly simple.

"Lingerie" touches are out, also organdy and pique trimmings. Clips and buttons are equally passe.

Ernest Dryden, designer associated with Hattie Carnegie, has a dress of this type made of homespun, with its only touch of color in an Ascot scarf tucked into the round neckline. This scarf may be of brocade. The belt, which is wider in front, should, Dryden says, look "as though it came from the outfit of a good horse." There is not a button on anything.

More Simplicity.

A daytime dress of checked homespun in the Scotch Glen Urquhart pattern—black and off-white—has a simple blouse cut like a polo shirt and a straight, unadorned skirt.

Almost equally simple is a morning-to-night two-piece dress of bottle green velvet. The blouse is cut as casually as a sport jumper.

Black, brown, and green are favored colors for daytime; black, red, and gold brocade for evening. Black leads both lists.

Coats will be either very fitted or very swagger, and an occasional versatile garment combines both lines. A good all-purpose coat of beige homespun, with huge collar of nutria, has a fitted look in front, a swagger back.

An evening dress of black taffetta shot with silver threads has a tight bust draped like a flower, a fitted bodice of red velvet disappearing into the black, and a skirt which is very full from the thighs down. It it extremely low in both back and front.

"Empress of Russia" is the name of an extravagant-looking evening wrap of fiery red and gold brocade. This has a shirred waist, a full skirt, an enormous collar of mink, and loose kimono sleeves with mink cuffs.

When Children Defy the Parents' Wishes, What Should Parents Do?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Our children, a boy and a girl of high school age, have turned against their father and me because we disapprove of drinking, smoking, late hours, association with persons of doubtful morals, and telling off-color stories.

* * * *

They call us old-fashioned, narrow-minded and cranky and defy us to run their lives. Like all parents, we want our children to have reasonable pleasures and we try to keep up with the times. But we don't feel that young people can touch life at its worst without being contaminated. It seems to us that their future happiness depends on keeping a decent standard of conduct and associates.

* * * *

Is there anything we can do or say that will bring them around to our point of view and break down this wall of resentment they have built around us?

UNHAPPY MOTHER.

On Their Honor.

Dear Unhappy Mother: Your best course is to present an attitude of pleasant yet dignified unconcern toward your children's resentment. Don't nag, hope for the best and bide your time. Children of parents with standards such as yours are not likely to be very reckless, regardless of what they may say or with whom they may associate, so long as you command their respect and affection.

* * * *

By making yourself too responsible for their conduct at an age when they must begin to test their own wings, you take away the necessity of their developing their own characters, their own standards, and their own powers of resistance and selectivity.

* * * *

Put them, by implication, on their honor. Let them understand they are answerable to their own consciences, their own future, and to the standard of ethics to which they have been introduced by parental example and early training, rather than to their father and their mother whose destinies, after all, are separate and distinct from theirs.

They are old enough now to know right from wrong; to apprehend there are laws of cause and effect; and, if they must, to suffer the consequences of rash actions. Neither you nor their father can hope to stand between them and painful experience. If they are made to feel they must accept the responsibility and pay the penalty for unwise conduct, it will do more to stay their pace than any amount of lecturing, pleading, sulking or prohibiting.

* * * *

The feeling that their parents respect and trust their ability to look after themselves, morally and socially, is a spur which will keep the average worthwhile boy or girl on the right path.

* * * *

Your children's resentment against you is nothing more nor less than a confused attempt to defend their rights to leave the nest. Let them feel the doors are open and the choice of highways theirs—that they may benefit from your experience and wisdom on request, but only on request, and after a few brief excursions into the dooryard of life they will be back for a map.

M. H.

Chinese Partial to U. S. College Songs

Peiping, July 26 (AP).—Chinese students prefer the American type of college song to their own melodies, the results of a song contest held at Yenching University here have disclosed.

Out of 32 songs submitted, the student audience chose a sentimental Western melody. Though several Chinese tunes were offered, they failed to make even second place, the prize for which was carried off by a marching song reminiscent of "Yankee Doodle."

Third honors went to a lyric by one of China's best-known poets, which had been adapted as a dignified anthem in semi-Chinese notation.

English Abuse Held No Fault Of Instructors

Fault Is Laid at Door of School Systems by Extensive Report.

GENERAL abuse of the English language in ordinary conversation is not the fault of the Nation's school teachers. It is rather due to school systems that place too much emphasis on nonessentials.

This is brought out in a report by Dr. L. J. O'Rourke, director of a Nation-wide study of English usage in which 40,000 teachers participated and 1,500,000 children were tested. The report, entitled "Rebuilding the English Usage Curriculum to Insure Greater Mastery of the Essentials," has been published by the Psychological Institute of Washington.

The study, which shows only 44.7 per cent of eighth-grade pupils in the public schools have a mastery of the essentials of English usage, emphasizes the necessity of stressing the fundamentals of language rather than the niceties. It says:

Limitation Urged.

"Limiting the English-usage curriculum in the elementary schools to principles of major importance, introduced in proper sequence, will insure greatly increased mastery of essential phases of usage, and consequently better preparation for life outside of school as well as for further education."

The report further points out "phases of least importance are, in general, more difficult for pupils of all grades than are essentials." It says:

"Futile attempts to master difficult principles which few people observe undoubtedly contribute to the feeling of dislike with which many pupils regard the study of English usage."

In other words, it is more important to learn the distinction between "set" and "sit" than between "should" and "would."

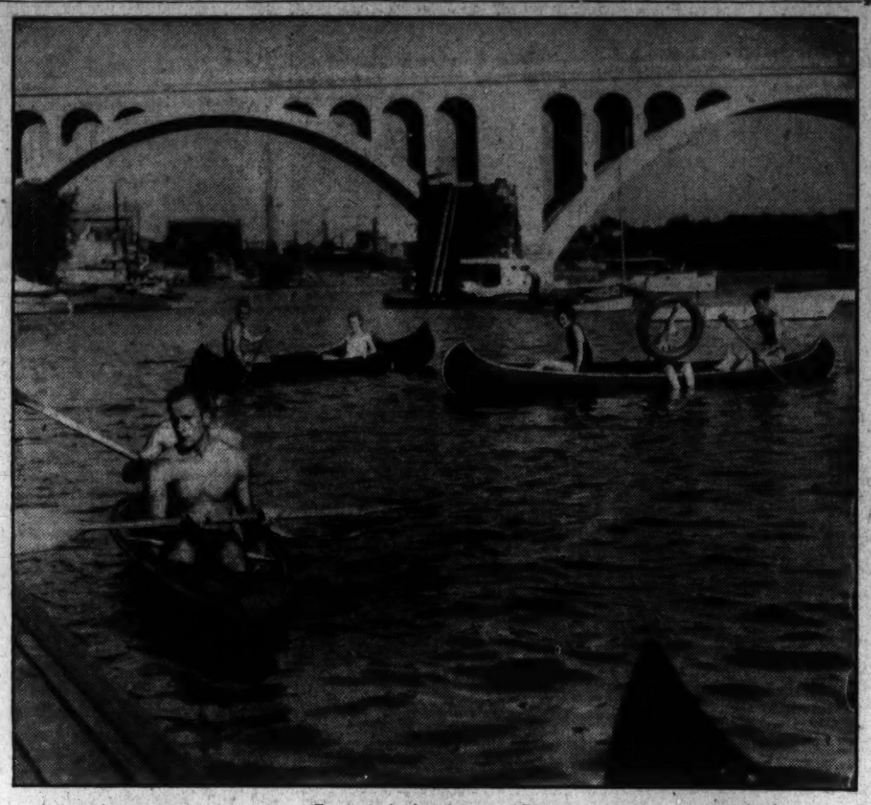
The report deplores a system that requires teachers to drill pupils in the minor rules of usage in order that they may pass their examinations and qualify for high school, and at the same time neglects the general language problems that arise in daily conversation. It says:

"The fact that pupils fail to master points that are not essential to good usage, despite the amount of time and effort spent in teaching them, is sufficient proof of the waste involved in requiring teachers to drill such rules."

Know System's Faults.

That teachers themselves recognize the weakness of the present systems of teaching English usage and are eager to correct them is brought out by Dr. O'Rourke: In his preface he says:

"There could be no better indication of the caliber of the superintendents, principals and other educators in charge of our schools than their earnest efforts, through such studies as this, to determine the relative importance of subject matter in a course of study, to eliminate that which is of little functional value and which consumes time entirely out of proportion to its significance, and to improve teaching methods so as to insure greater mastery of that which is essential."



A typical summer scene near a Georgetown boathouse. "Everyone used to go canoeing," confides one veteran riverman. "Many still do. But I guess people are lazier. They prefer motorboats nowadays."

Slow-Moving Waters Accept Local Boaters and Swimmers

Through the Day and Early Night the River Life, Raucous and Peaceful, Rowdy and Beautiful, Goes on the Water and Up and Down the Shores.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

It is remote, shining with the memory of mystic nights. It is commonplace, heavy with its burden of filth. To every Washingtonian it is "my river."

Tattered children paddle in the shallow, muddy waters near the shore on hot afternoons. They ignore the green slime that floats on the water near the river edge. They are not frightened by tales of other children who have dared the water all too carelessly.

"Well, I got to swim, ain't I?" questions one young swimmer. "And it takes too much money to go in pools. Besides you have to wear bathing suits in them." He glances down at his ragged breeches. He has left the rest of his clothes, a faded shirt, on the river bank.

"Hurry up," he calls to his friend, who has been using the tall weeds as a dressing room. The two plunge into the thickly green water.

It is 5 o'clock. The boathouses on the Georgetown river front are thronged with Government clerks, who have rushed from their offices to the coolness of the river. Their faces are white, drawn by heat. The men take off their shirts. Some of them wear bathing suits. They swim near the shore.

Fifty Cents a Canoe.

Fifty cents rents a canoe. On late summer afternoons hundreds are on the river. Groups of young students take their books. They look for a shady spot on the river bank to study.

There are couples, foursomes. A boy yells from one canoe to another. "Hey, have you seen my girl friend?" He sees her. Kids her for her habitual tardiness. Some of the elderly men own their own canoes. They push them into the water with gentle hands, almost caressing them. Their bay windows are prominent in their bathing suits. They talk business.

They are all laughing, happy. Fatigue and heat are forgotten. Their eyes are on the river, placid, golden in the late afternoon sun. It brings them peace.

"But people don't like canoeing as much as they did a few years ago," confides James M. Farley, who has been managing the Dempsey boathouse for 15 years. "When I first came here everybody went canoeing. Now I don't know whether they are less romantic, or lazier. But nowadays they seem to like motor boats better." And he points out a small speed boat. It is scarcely more than a white and scarlet streak as it speeds up the river. But a quick observer catches a glimpse of brown-skinned bodies, hair flying in the wind, faces wet with spray.

Moonlight Trips.

About 8 o'clock the moonlight boats leave the Seventh street wharves. And on hot nights these are crammed and jammed with the river-conscious.

There are barrooms where beer, sandwiches and soft drinks are served. The atmosphere is informal. The waitresses sit and talk to the customers, dance with each other when business is dull.

A dozen people sit at a long table, become mildly inebriated on beer. They hold arms and sing. They call it "harmony." They are a little off key. No one cares.

"Shine on, shine on harvest moon up in the sky," they sing loudly. One romanticist is gazing wistfully over the head of the brown-haired girl who leans stupidly on his arm. He sighs.

At the next table a bridge game is in progress. The players drink, beer, the motion of the boat makes it slop on the cards. They quarrel.

The waitress is talkative and friendly. "It isn't such a bad job," she says. "Of course we don't make a lot of money. But we have fun. It is interesting work. Monday night I made two dollars. Tonight I haven't made a darned cent."

In the next room an orchestra is playing. The musicians are not less endowed with charm than those million-dollar crooners who make women all over America sigh for greater romance.

A group of unescorted women have gathered round the orchestra. They are coy and playful. They take off their hats and place them on the musicians' heads. One lonely-looking, very thin girl stands close by one of the most attractive players. She shifts her gum from one cheek to the other. She winks at him. He glares over her head.

Couples murmur in the soft darkness. The orchestra is heard far off, throbbing, a little melancholy. The rhythm of dancing feet can be felt throughout the ship. The waves swish softly against its sides.

Coming home the lights around Hains Point make a little bright chain. They are reflected in the dark water. The Capital seems a bright jewel suspended from the skies. Cool, whitely beautiful, the Washington Monument rises above the darkened city.

"All ashore that's going ashore," shouts the boat's captain.

The results of business activities on this date will depned largely upon the amount of peronal energy expended in the effort to obtain them. You possibly may be in a better financial shape before the day is over than you are in the morning. Care should be exercised not to offend a prospective customer or client. Keep your eyes wide open, for an acquaintance may, by sharp practice, try to put rather a raw deal over if they think you are inclined to be gullible. It might be advisable to carefully recheck any financial statements or invoices received on this date as errors may exit.

If a woman and July 27 is your birthday, it might be wise to avoid trying to control, direct, or supervise the individual actions of your family and friends. Every one has their own salvation to work out, and you may conserve a great deal of valuable time and energy if you mind your own business. Your future should hold a great deal of promise.

The child born on July 27, as it grows up, should be taught the value of money. Any tendency to waste it, prompted largely by the desire to spend, must be curbed at an early age.

If a man and born on July 27, avoid being dictatorial if you wish happiness and popularity. It might be wise not to try to force your opinions on others.

Jai Alai Finds Girl Devotees

Strenuous Latin Sport Combines Court Features.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

PEOPLE who go to Cuba have been coming back making a very odd noise. After hearing it a few times, it appears that they are saying "jai alai."

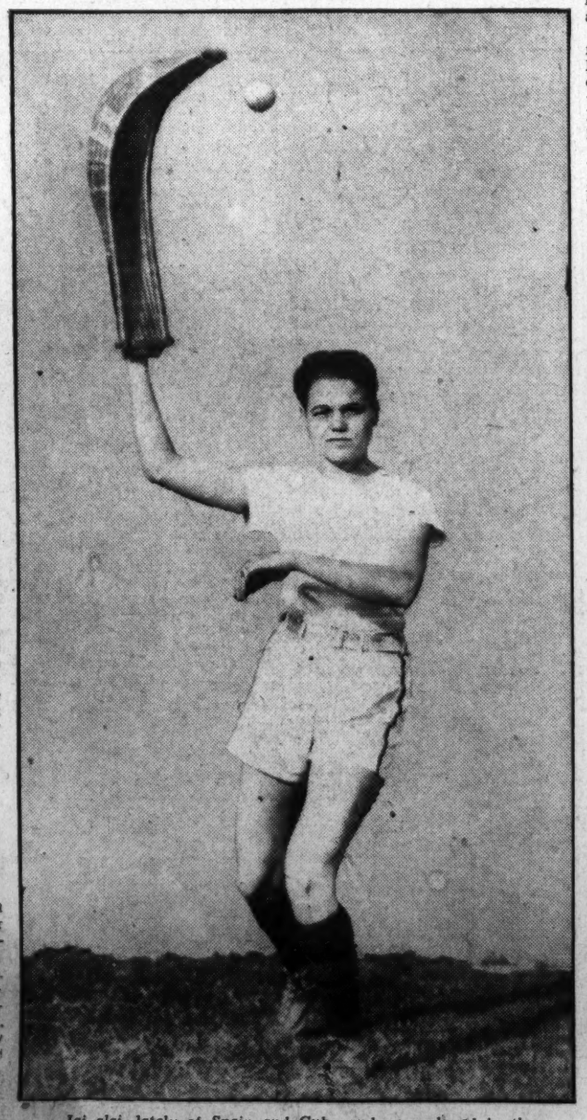
Jai alai is a sport that is heard from periodically, but to its fans, like baseball, it should go on forever. Women have taken it up with special enthusiasm. The name, happily, means "merry festival." In plain English, it's a riot.

It originated in the Basque country of Spain, and in its wanderings it has been much played by Latins and Latin-Americans. Having become firmly placed as a national sport of Spain, jai alai emigrated to Mexico City, then to Havana, and to Miami. American visitors who couldn't bear to leave it brought the game back to various sections of the United States.

It is really a court game, but it is played much on the beaches. It combines features of handball, tennis and squash. The curved wicker cesta is worn strapped to the arm, with an attached gauntlet.

Americans, at home or voyaging South, no matter how keen their interest, treat the game as an amateur sport of high order. But in Spain, Mexico and Cuba, men have kept "stables" of jai alai players, just as boxing managers handle stables of fighters.

Among the women, Evelyn Watts and Mrs. John McVicker, of New York, have put in plenty of practice in Cuba. Katherine Hines, of Miami, Fla., is the resident American girl who has reached the highest level of play.



Jai alai, lately of Spain and Cuba and now played in the United States, is ably demonstrated by Katherine Hines, of Miami.

Black Ostrich Plumes Make a Curly Cape

Paris (AP).—A fluffy cape of curled ostrich plumes gave a frivolous touch to a costume which one smart Parisian chose for a recent soiree. It was worn over a gown of black mousseline splashed with rose and mauve flowers, the decollete of which was edged with green leaves cut from the fabric. Black crepe de chine sandals completed the costume.

Cotton Wedding Dresses Seen on Summer Brides

Short, Curly Bobs Popular, Wires Expert

Shorn Tresses in Fashion Aboard Ship, Washington Hairdresser Cables.

By Frances Mangum.

FROM the S. S. Mauretania, South America bound, there came news yesterday that short bobs were all the thing abroad ships. And not only short bobs, but curls.

A young Washington hairdresser and owner of a local shop sent a radiogram to the Woman's Department of The Post. It read:

"Have your long bob converted into cooler style. Short bobs in brush-up curl very popular aboard ship."

There are few who will deny that a short bob can do things to a person's face. It will take off as many as five years at one cutting. And it will save a month of Sundays in convenience.

Not Coy at All.

Older women sometimes fear short bobs will make them look kittenish. They evidently do not realize they can have their hair cut in such a fashion that it appears to be long from the front simply from the way it is brushed back. But instead of a knot at the back of the head their hair is trimmed evenly and neatly and there is no more straggling!

Any woman whether she's in her teens or her 50's will find bobbed hair a marvelous comfort when traveling. It's so easy to shampoo! Easy to arrange! And so cool!

On board ship it's especially convenient. No matter how the breeze plays havoc with it, a swish of the comb and it's in place again. No matter how much salt spray blows its way, a rinsing under the shower, about ten minutes of drying, and all is well-groomed once more.

And the Permanent.

The ideal way to wear the hair if one is going on extensive tours is cut close and short, with a permanent, of course. Nowadays it's possible to have almost any kind of coiffure you want from tight ringlets to loose undulating waves, all via the permanent.

Keep a bottle of good waving fluid handy and set the curls once a week. Between times dampen the hair and comb the waves into place as often as is necessary, which shouldn't be often.

Remember that during the summer no coiffure is quite as attractive as the one that looks cool, and is cool.

Princeton Graduate Praised by Einstein

Boy's Thesis on Rotation Is Read by Scientist.

Princeton, N. J., July 28 (Spl.).—When Prof. Albert Einstein, member of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, heard that a 19-year-old undergraduate had written his senior thesis on "The Absolute Significance of Rotation," the German scientist told Princeton officials he would like to read it.

"The clarity," wrote the scientist, "with which this young man has grasped this problem is astonishing, as his mastery of the formal apparatus. In my opinion, of course, he is by no means correct in his conclusion. As soon as I return I should like to talk to him in detail. Give him my greetings. There is good stuff in the lad."

PILLAR to POST

MRS. HAL GAYLORD, of Kansas City, upon her recent visit here was regaled with tales that proved the need for a "home center" in Washington such as she has established in her home town. In this school women are trained as housekeepers, maids, cooks and all the various arts necessary to make the home a well regulated institution.

* * * *

"I wish I could send my daughter to a place like that," said the mother of a Washington debutante.

Mrs. Gaylord, who is a leader in civic movements and the social life of Kansas City, works in the kitchen herself. One morning a young friend followed her and asked what she was doing.

* * * *

"I'm making jam. Do you know how?"

"You use a bag or something, don't you?" asked the girl vaguely.

Another Washington matron who is not above cooking told of a friend who had a Japanese cook, Hashimuri. One day he was absent and the two women went into the kitchen to see about getting themselves something to eat.

"Oh, but I don't want to learn," said the other craftily. "I might have to do it sometime."

* * * *

Another time these two women were chatting when the governess brought the little daughter of the house to see her mother before taking her to the park. The lace of the little girl's panties hung down below her petticoat, and the friend suggested a tuck should be taken before she went on the street.

* * * *

"I haven't any needle and thread," said the other, with surprise that anyone should make such a demand, "but Hashimuri might."

Rubber Pouch A Convenience For Travelers

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Who hasn't started off on a trip and before many miles were peeled off the map found to her deep disgust she has no soap,wash rag, or toothbrush. Perhaps she has no container for them. A disconcerting situation!

Local shoppers will find in the toilet goods department of a downtown store a varied assemblage of innumerable vacation conveniences. There is a rubberized pouch containing a wash cloth. The pouch is also lined with rubber for double protection. It will hold soap, toothbrush, and wash cloth, yet doesn't take up a lot of space in the handbag.

Tooth brush cases matching the soap boxes will make an attractive ensemble. There are small air holes in the top of these which enable the tooth brush to dry even though inclosed.

Vacation Hair Care.

There are many vacationists who will be glad to know that a group of hair specialists have put out a one dollar vacation package which includes two essentials for care of the hair.

It contains a tonic for either dry or olly hair, and a small jar of pomade The pomade is splendid for scalp irritations and is the very thing for rubbing over temples where the hair is fast receding.

Some time ago they put out a larger and more complete kit with a tonic, a castile shampoo, pomade and comb. This one is two dollars.

Exceeding a Prophecy.

There was popularity prophesied for the Madonna blue glassware featured at a downtown store, but the popularity is exceeding the prophecy.

The blue is a soft rich color like twilight skies. To find it in such inexpensive glassware is amazing. There are large luncheon plates, small deep bowls, meat or salad platters, vegetable dishes, cups and saucers, cream and sugar sets, salts and peppers, large pitchers, and glasses in several sizes.

Seeing them stacked on the counter a shopper might not realize at first glance what artistic possibilities this glassware has. But let her imagine a table spread with a snowy white cloth, a vase of pink or yellow flowers and the places set with this Madonna blue ware.

The fact that it is so inexpensive makes it that much more fun to use.

Bubble Earrings.

Bubble earrings are worth seeing. And what's more they're worth wearing. The jewelry department of a local store has all kinds of them in at least a half-a-dozen colors.

They look as though they had been blown up for the special purpose of dangling lightly from a small ear lobe. To all appearances they would whisk away at the smallest breeze, but they're unusually sturdy.

Here are earrings so simple they are well suited to tailored frocks. It is also possible to buy clips and necklaces to match. All of them are reasonably priced.

Chemistry Sets.

They call them toys, those chemistry sets in a downtown store, but they are so large and complete they look far more like laboratories.

There is one which has 24 glass tubes of chemicals and 34 wooden boxes. Besides there are test tubes, tongs, spoons, measuring utensils, glass bowls, funnels, a generating bottle and an alcohol lamp.

It also has litmus paper, zinc and copper strips, wire, and numerous other gadgets which the chemist, amateur or not, needs. A book of directions tells how to make all kinds of concoctions, even glass.

There are smaller sets not quite so complete which sell for half the price of this one. The smallest is only 98 cents.

Slippers Incased.

Lamppost Lamp.

Hand Clips.

The newest thing in clips is a composition hand, exquisitely cut with graceful tapering fingers. Fastened on a dress, hat, or even bag they are extremely chic.

Evening Sandals Contrast With Dresses in Paris

Paris (AP).—Sandals in a color which contrasts with the evening frocks are being worn by some of the smartest Parisians during the gala summer season. At a recent smart dinner one guest wore a gown of pearl gray roman crepe with sandals in a brilliant fuchsia, while another appeared in a frock of flesh colored velvet and sandals of turquoise blue.

CAPITAL KITCHEN

Impossible to Have Too Many Jams and Jellies in the Pantry.

By Susan Mills.

Here are a few ideas you may have overlooked:

Peach Preserves.

8 cups water
6 pounds sugar

Put the peaches in a wire basket and dip them in boiling water a few seconds or until the skin slips. Test by raising the fruit out of the water and rubbing the skin between the fingers.

Dip the peaches into cold water. Peel and cut the peaches in halves. Boil the sugar and water until the syrup coats a spoon. Add the peaches and cook until they are clear, and the syrup thick. Turn into hot, clean jars. Seal tightly.

Apple and Tomato Conserve.

2 cups ripe tomatoes, cut
1 lemon, grated rind and juice
2¾ cups sugar

Cook the apples and the tomatoes, without adding any water, until they are tender. Add the sugar and the lemon, and cook the mixture until it is clear. Turn the conserve into clean jelly glasses, and cover with paraffin when cold.

Grape Marmalade.

Wash grapes, remove stems, and separate pulp from skins. Put pulp in saucepan and cook slowly until seeds separate easily, then rub through fine sieve. Measure pulp, add an equal measure of sugar, and cook slowly 30 minutes, stirring frequently to prevent burning. Put in sterilized jars.

Orange Jelly.

3 lemons
Cold water
Sugar

Cut oranges and lemons in very thin slices, discarding seeds. Measure and for each cup allow three cups water. Bring to boiling point and boil one hour. Let drain in jelly-bag overnight. Measure juice and for each cup add one cup sugar. Boil until a little dropped on a cold saucer forms a jelly-like clot. Turn into sterilized jars and when cold cover with paraffin.

ESCAPE from the SOVIETS

By TATIANA TCHERNAVIN

Tatiana Tchernavin, after months of hardship in a Soviet prison, was released, rejoined her son and with him visited her husband, exiled in Kem. He told her of a mad plan for the three of them to escape.

"HOW should we find the way?"

It's a straight road beginning just beyond the station. The train arrives at night, but the nights will be light in the summer; it's beyond the Arctic Circle."

He told me exactly where we should have to meet.

"How shall I know the date?"

"In my letter I will mention a number, that will mean the date on which you must be on the stop. It must be in July, it's the driest month and there are berries and mushrooms then. But I think I'll contrive to be sent to this place here," he pointed to the point he first indicated, and get permission for you to come and see me there. That will be much simpler and then we can set out together. You'd better bring with you a razor to shave off my beard and a change of clothes for me. Everyone would know me with my black beard and in this leather coat. Shall we tell

Now we talked freely and happily, discussing the details of our plan. We recalled the past, told each other of the sad fate of our friends, but our hearts were light because a new force was born in us, raising us above all that we had been through.

On the evening of the following day we had to go home. My husband was allowed to see us off at the station—a rare favor, but a perfectly safe one; he could not very well escape with a family at the station full of OGPU officers.

It was dark at the station. We entered an unlighted, half-empty carriage. In another 15 minutes we should be gone and he would return to the camp.

He was still standing beside me in the dark corridor. Fourteen minutes were left. The hand of the clock moved another minute—now it was thirteen.

I think that if I had had to die in thirteen minutes I should have found words to say good-by; but when I had to return to what had once been our home and he—to go behind barbed wire, I could not utter a syllable. Twelve minutes were left us.

Tragic Farewell.

My husband was holding both my hands and saying something, but I did not hear, I could not take it in. Nine minutes. I could see nothing. tears flowed from my eyes like water. I could not control myself. How silly! Breaking down like that at the last moment.

"What is it, darling? What has happened?" I heard my husband's voice as in a dream.

I came back from the visit in a confused state of mind. And so, we were going away for good! This life was done with, and we did not know whether we should find our way to a new one

Well, I had to get ready; to sell some things, to buy others, to think out what we should want. Top boots, sweaters, knapsacks, food. . . He said that sugar and bacon were essential, because they were the most nourishing and compact. I must try and get some rice, prepare a few rusks. We should be a week or perhaps ten days on the way.

I began selling my possessions; I went to friends, to shops that took things on commission, to second-hand booksellers. I had to be careful not to attract attention, for the least trifle might cause the OGPU to exile me, and that would ruin everything.

Money Hard to Get.

It took me weeks to realize two or three hundred roubles, and I had to pay 150 roubles for a pair of second-hand boots, 100 roubles for a sweater; I despaired of ever getting all that we needed.

I could not ask a single friend to help me because to know or to suspect that some one contemplates escape from U. S. S. R. and not to denounce him, is a crime punishable by at least five years penal servitude. We had to arrange everything unaided, being hardly able to communicate with each other; once a month my husband could send me a letter that passed through hte OGPU censorship, and I had to gather my directions from symbolic words and signs we had agreed upon at Kem.

I calmed down only a few days before our departure; there was nothing more I could do, anyway.

Too Tired to Stand.

I wanted to say good-by to the hermitage. I went there like an ordinary visitor, paid at the entrance and walked round all my favorite halls. I could not help noticing what was still in place and what had disappeared for ever.

As I was about to go I met one of the young assistants. She sank on to a chair in utter exhaustion.

"I am sorry, I simply can not stand. We are done to death with meetings, committees, plans, reports and I haven't been able to have any dinner for two days. What were you doing here?"

"Looking at the remains of the hermitage. I still love it, you know."

"Perhaps one might love it if one didn't work in it," she said sadly. "It seems to me it is nothing but diagrams, schedules, classifications, Marxism. I think you are lucky to have left your post."

"You mean, to have lost my post," I corrected her.

Weeks Flew Past.

There was so much to do before going away that I hardly noticed how the weeks passed. I felt as though I had not had time to look round before we found ourselves in the train, going along the route that we remembered only too well. We again saw prisoners digging by the railway, the wives going on a visit and shyly keeping apart from other passengers. But I no longer felt one of them—I was going not on a visit, but much, much farther, and from time to time a wave of gay recklessness came over me.

A group of students sent from the Forestries Institute to act as overseers on timber-works were traveling with us. They were not very cheerful about it. Only a few had been given top boots—the others would have to tramp about the forest in worn town shoes. None were provided with mosquito nets.

Food Supply Inadequate.

The supply of food given them was barely enough for the journey—and they rightly doubted whether they could buy provisions on the spot. They could not refuse going because it had been decided at the general meeting of the institute that the students were to be sent to timber works during the vacation.

I could not go to sleep; the northern night was light, the carriage was hot and stuffy, sand and smuts were blowing in at the open windows.

"I was thinking of Mishka. He was murdered last year, you remember?"

Taking No Chances.

The others were arguing about the geography of the parts where they were going; they knew nothing about it. It was settled almost at the last moment which of them were going to Karelia, which to the Urals or to Siberia, so that they had not had time to read up the subject. When I began answering their naive, elementary questions, which I could have answered as a schoolgirl, the whole group of them settled beside me and listened as to a lecture.

"That's fine! A traveling university!" they said approvingly, making notes, and asking more questions. They were sorry I could not come with them: "You would teach us a thing or two."

I very much wanted to tell them that in the part where they were going there were several thousand prisoners far better qualified than I, but this would be "counter-revolutionary propaganda," so I said nothing.

On to Baltimore.

Seventy-four patrols with a membership of about 500 Scouts have earned the standard camper rating in the District of Columbia Council, entitling them to participation in the Regional Camporal in Herring Run Park, Baltimore, Md., August 17, 18 and 19. Patrols are registering at local Scout Headquarters for this affair.

Inspection of Camps.

The District of Columbia Scout Camps will be inspected by the National Department of Camping August 16 and 17.

During August inspections are scheduled for many troop camps by members of the District of Columbia camp committee. Troop 14, of the Luther Place Memorial Church, will have their camp inspected tomorrow.

The Community Picnic.

The community picnic at Camp Roosevelt was held Wednesday. Many freak contests featured the day's program, which ended with a play, "The Monkey's Paw." A beauty contest for girls and a homely contest for men proved most popular.

Extra Week.

For the benefit of summer school students an extra week is proposed at Camp Roosevelt from August 20 to 27. While this depends on sufficient registrations in advance, it seems probable enough they will be obtained. The camp is filled to capacity at present.

Friends and strangers alike are glad to meet at Camp Roosevelt an old friend of the camp in the person of Bill Leitch. Bill is a new addition to the staff and has been very active in the promotion of pioneering.

The vesper services, Sunday at 5 p. m., will be led by the Rev. John A. Trader, of the Cherrydale, Va., Methodist Protestant Church.

First Aid Experience Useful.

Larry Hamilton, patrol leader of Troop 49's First Aid Patrol, had an opportunity to demonstrate his ability last week. Harry was at Plum Point when a girl was discovered unconscious in the water. He immediately administered artificial respiration, and when the doctor arrived had revived the girl and had his patient in a comfortable condition.

Arrangements have been made at the McKinley and Takoma Park swimming pools for Scoutmasters to hold their troop meetings at the pools if desirable on any evening up to 10 o'clock, except Saturdays, Sundays or holidays. According to this arrangement the Scoutmaster may purchase tickets for the whole group at 10 cents each, which carries the privilege of locker, towel and swim.

Astronomy Night.

The evening of Wednesday, August 15, has been set aside as Astronomy Night in the District of Columbia Council. At that time all Scouts interested in astronomy will have the benefits of expert counsel and the best equipment available in Washington. Place will be announced in the bulletin.

Pep.

The Patrol Energizing Program, which is a method by which patrols may qualify for the standard rating themselves and may also qualify their troops, started July 1. According to this program the year is divided into four seasons of three months each. The requirement for the summer season, July 1 to October 1, is that at least one-half of the members of the patrol shall spend a total of a week in an approved camp.

First Aid at Marshall Hall.

Scout First Aid Patrols continue to enoy the opportunity for service at Marshall Hall. The cabin which was dedicated to this work early in the season is being occupied several days each week by Scouts from various troops. Any patrol wishing an assignment for one or more days should make the request at Scout Headquarters at once.

Radio Waves and Ripples

"MURDER in the Red Barn," three whole acts of it, will absolutely be given its world radio premiere tonight at 10:15 over WMAL.

Crossed wires, skullduggery, and sinister allusions left this department, too, dangling on the limb for a while, but the Roadside Theater Players, thoroughly convinced that mere line charges are as nothing, are prepared to put on one grand show in their former shoe-heel factory out Rockville Pike way.

Ford cars, baby Austins and buckboards will convey a whole company of radio scribes, studio officials and others thirsting after lurid "meller drammer" to see:

You will agree after you've heard the "drammer" that that droll fellow, Jim McGrath, who will ring the changes during the piece, is the one man to aid listeners in visualizing what lucky first nighters will certainly heave chuckles over.

* * * *

Name of Arthur Godfrey in electric lights . . . Dance floor dominated by young things in arms of dashing military men . . . C. B. S. microphone with Godfrey behind it poking his maestro's wand at bass fiddle . . . Natty-looking musicians in mess jackets . . . One diplomat, mysterious and suave, armed with one jar of 100-year-old rum . . . One table of glum radio scribes . . . One sprightly showgirl (same table) accompanied by dark, handsome man . . . Three C. B. S. officials beaming at Godfrey . . . who beams back and waves at the drummer with professional jauntiness . . . One little tap dancer (Miss Jane Phenix) making her floor show debut and going over big . . . One radio scribe viewing one sidecar with anxiety.

PHIL BAKER, jester, now preparing a musical revue, "The Gift of Gab," will not allow his picture making to interrupt Friday engagements with his N. B. C. audience. His program will be heard over the networks from the film capital from 8:30 to 9 p. m.

Things to note:

That opening night of Godfrey and his band was delicious, auspicious, suspicious, portentous, melodious and "swell" . . . That one Max Baer and one checkered suit were among notables present . . . That one waiter can take orders for 10 beverages without losing aplomb . . . That said Baer is contemplating Hollywood film with Loretta Young, a new series (maybe) with C. B. S. and that the world heavyweight champ's favorite sports writer is Bill McCormick of the Post.

Things to remember:

The Baer shoulders . . . His little "gray-haired mother" . . . Ted Church asking Baer, "Where do you get the personality, Maxie?" . . . Godfrey can break phonograph records, greet six acquaintances at once, grin, produce his golden voice, and also lead a band. N. B.—Watch that little tap dancer . . . Al Chance discovered her . . . And radio may get her.

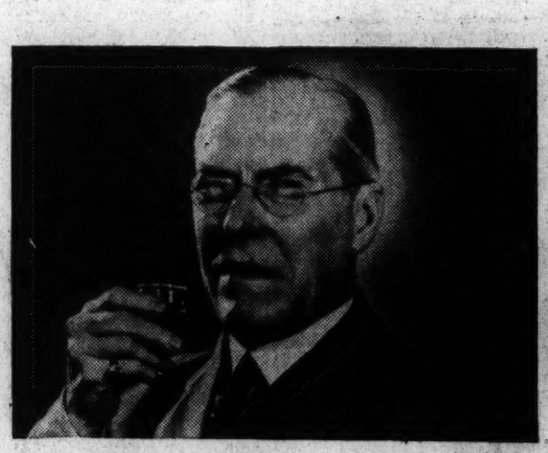
Taste wins!

FOUR ROSES RYE WHISKEY

TRIUMPHS OVER 30 OTHER BRANDS!



Some whiskies are too harsh—because they're loaded with raw green liquor. Others are too flat—because there's very little real whiskey in them.

FLAVOR—finer flavor—that's what everyone wants in whiskey.

Not because we say so. But because, in actual "blind" taste-tests, Four Roses has triumphed over 30 other famous brands!

Try Four Roses yourself! Compare it with any other whiskey. See if your own palate doesn't put its stamp of approval on Four Roses Rye. For smoothness. For richer, mellower flavor.

For Four Roses is not made like a lot of the ordinary brands you see. It's made in the slow, old-fashioned way—from pure, handmade, aged-in-the-wood, Maryland Rye whiskies. No tricks!

Four Roses is made by Frankfort, America's largest independent distilling organization, and a company with four generations of whiskey-making experience. Its yeast-culture—key-ingredient in making great whiskey—has been carefully guarded for 50 years.

Get a bottle of Four Roses Rye! In full pints and quarts at the better liquor stores—and reasonably priced. Ask for Four Roses at hotels and restaurants, too. You can be certain of its purity. For it comes sealed in the patented Frankfort Pack that must be destroyed before the bottle within it can be removed.

* * *

PAUL JONES RYE

ANTIQUE RYE

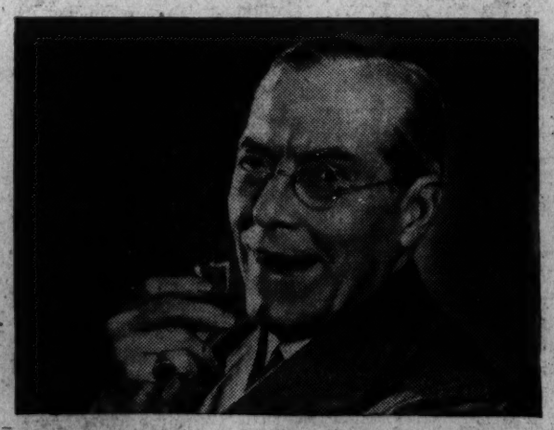
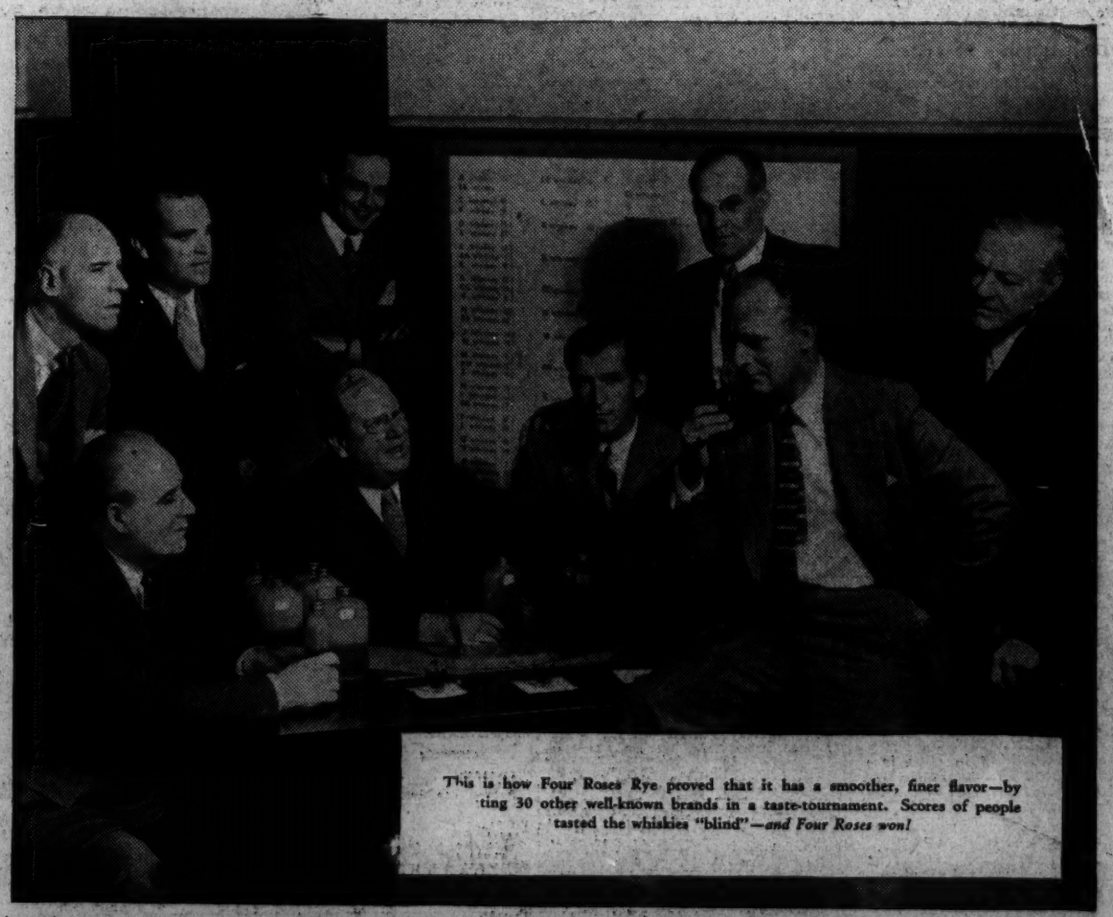
But taste Four Roses Rye! Here's real whiskey—smooth as velvet, mellow, full of that old-fashioned Maryland flavor.



Then remember this about Four Roses! Because of the way it's made, you can drink it with moderation without fear of headaches.

MADE BY FRANKFORT . . . AMERICA'S LARGEST INDEPENDENT DISTILLERS



This is how Four Roses Rye proved that it has a smoother, finer flavor—by ting 30 other well-known brands in a taste-tournament. Scores of people tasted the whiskies "blind"—and Four Roses won!

Hurler Holds Washington To 6 Hits

Errors by Cronin, Myer Help Hose Score Five Runs in Third.

By Lewis F. Atchison
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHICAGO, Ill., July 26.—Sad Sam'l Jones, the melancholy old gentleman who has been annoying American League batters for 20 years, 4 of them spent with Washington, celebrated his forty-second birthday today, so his Chicago teammates presented him with a 9-to-0 victory over Washington.

It was the White Socksters' second consecutive shutout and third victory over Washington in this series, although the other pitchers weren't celebrating birthdays.

A delegation of folks from Sam's home town, Woodsfield, Ohio, and the mayor, justice of the peace and some other fellers not so important, came up to see Sam pitch. They presented him with a bunch of flowers and a horse, though they only had a receipt for the animal with them.

Allows But Six Hits.

One of the fellers, he was a card, too, brought along his accordion and they were cutting capers all afternoon. But the Washington boys didn't seem to enjoy themselves. Maybe it was because old Sam'l cut himself too big a slice of their batting averages. The old gentleman only gave 'em six hits, while hanging up his 229th victory in the big show.

Monte Weaver started for Washington, but the party was too lively for him and he passed out in the fourth inning. McColl took his place on the hillock.

Joe Cronin and Buddy Myer presented Sam with a couple of runs in the third inning, starting the Chicagoans off on a rally of five unearned runs.

Kick Away Double-Play.

With two out Joe booted Simmons' roller, and later Buddy muffed Dykes' easy bounder. In the meantime, Swanson tripled, Bonura singled, Appling singled and Hopkins doubled, and that decided the ball game.

Weaver departed in the succeeding frame as the Sox pushed over their four other runs on single by Swanson, Simmons and Bonura, with passes to Conlan and Jones sprinkled in between. McColl strode out to the hill and managed to prevent any further damage.

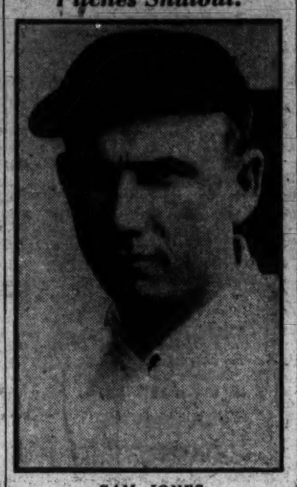
Jones, meanwhile, was having a rare good time. Luke Sewell was the only guest to reach third—by the grace of Dykes' error, and Travis was the only other Nat to get half way around. Sam'l evidently realized the importance of the occasion.

Phillips for Sewell.

Cronin supplanted Sewell with Eddie Phillips in the seventh inning and it probably was Eddie's last time behind the plate for the deposed champions as he will be disposed of to make way for Cliff Bolton.

"Peggy" Hopkins, at third for the Chicagos, turned in two sparkling plays to Sam's birthday party and both helped keep the Nats out of the scoring column.

Pitches Shutout.



SAM JONES,

29,000 Watch Giants, Cards Split Pair

Dean Brothers 'Gang' Hubbel in First, 7-2; New Yorkers Win 2d, 6-3.

NEW YORK, July 26 (AP).—The world champion Giants, with characteristic recuperative spirit, saved an even break with the highly dangerous St. Louis Cardinals today by lifting a 6-to-3 decision, after having their ace pitcher, Carl Hubbell, badly battered and dropping the first game of a double-header, 7 to 2.

A crowd of 29,000 saw the rival pennant contenders battle each other to a standstill as the Western invasion of the oPlo Grounds ended. The iGants remained four games in front of the Cardinals, but the defeat of the second-place Chicago Cubs in Brooklyn increased the champions' lead to 2½ games.

Kick Away Double-Play.

With two out Joe booted Simmons' roller, and later Buddy muffed Dykes' easy bounder. In the meantime, Swanson tripled, Bonura singled, Appling singled and Hopkins doubled, and that decided the ball game.

Weaver departed in the succeeding frame as the Sox pushed over their four other runs on single by Swanson, Simmons and Bonura, with passes to Conlan and Jones sprinkled in between. McColl strode out to the hill and managed to prevent any further damage.

Jones, meanwhile, was having a rare good time. Luke Sewell was the only guest to reach third—by the grace of Dykes' error, and Travis was the only other Nat to get half way around. Sam'l evidently realized the importance of the occasion.

Phillips for Sewell.

Cronin supplanted Sewell with Eddie Phillips in the seventh inning and it probably was Eddie's last time behind the plate for the deposed champions as he will be disposed of to make way for Cliff Bolton.

"Peggy" Hopkins, at third for the Chicagos, turned in two sparkling plays to Sam's birthday party and both helped keep the Nats out of the scoring column.

Mrs. Green Victor At Martinsburg Golf

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 26 (Spl.).—A tin-whistle tournament conducted for ladies' day yesterday at Opequon Golf Club was a novelty for local women and an entire success as a source of competition and fun.

Using the ninth hole, players competed for low score. As they teed off, caddies concealed nearby blew whistles and attempted to confuse them. Mrs. C. W. Green was the guest winner, and Mrs. L. E. Rice the club winner. Each was awarded golf balls.

Mrs. C. D. Wysong, Shepherdstown, made high bridge score and Mrs. Willie Stewart was awarded the draw prize. High was a double deck of cards.

Gomez Wins, Yanks Back In Lead

Gehrig Gets Home Run; Newsom, of Browns, Grants 4 Blows.

ST. LOUIS, July 26 (AP).—The Yankees recaptured the American League lead from the Detroit Tigers today, when they closed their troubled tour of the West with a 3-to-1 victory over the Browns, behind the brilliant pitching of Lefty Gomez.

Gomez pitched one-hit ball up to the Ninth inning of his duel with Buck Newsom. Then he eased up a bit and, with one out, the Browns hit three straight singles for their only run before a double play ended the game. It was Gomez' sixteenth triumph of the season against three defeats.

Gehrig Hits Homer.

The Yanks also were limited to four hits, but Lou Gehrig opened the fourth inning with his twenty-ninth homer of the season and after two had been retired Sam Byrd doubled, Myril Hoag and Gomez drew passes and Frank Crosetti singled home two more runs.

U. S. Netmen Made Underdogs In Cup Play With Britishers

LONDON, July 26 (AP).—Regardless of their great comeback to defeat Australia in the interzone final, the United States Davis Cup team today was made a short-ender in the betting for the challenge round against England starting Saturday.

The Wimbledon fans' favorite commissioner offered even money against the United States, but forced those liking England's chances to lay 6 on the line to get 4.

Both teams indulged in intensive practice on the Wimbledon center court, where the matches will be fought, the two English aces, Fred Perry and H. W. (Bunny) Austin, first playing two torrid sets and then retiring to the royal box to watch the Americans.

Frank X. Shields and Sidney B. Wood, jr., the American singles players who amazed the tennis world with their stirring comeback against Jack Crawford and Vivian McGrath yesterday, played a five-set match. Flushed with their victories, both played many spectacular shots in their stirring contest.

Capt. R. Norris (Dick) Williams grinned as he watched his red hot youngsters go through their paces and the grin broadened as George M. Lott, jr., and Lester Stoefen demonstrated they were ready for the test by beating the tar out of Wood and R. S. Ramillon, the French professional, 6—2.

"You don't need to worry about the doubles," Lott later told Shields and Wood in the dressing room. "Les and I will take care of that. You win two singles."

The draw for the matches will be made tomorrow.

Dodgers Top Cubs; Weaver Loses First

Zachary Grants Six Hits in 6-to-3 Triumph.

Brooklyn, July 26 (AP).—Tom Zachary, veteran Brooklyn southpaw, subdued the Cubs with six hits today, while the Dodgers defeated Chicago, 6 to 3, and gave Big Jim Weaver his first defeat of the season.

Weaver, who had won two games for the St. Louis Browns and seven for the Cubs, was removed for a pinch hitter in the fifth after two passes and Danny Taylor's homer in the third had given Brooklyn a 3-2 lead. The Dodgers got three more runs off Bud Tinning in the fifth.

Peacock, Nee Advance in Spa Golf

Peacock Carried to 19th Hole by Roesch; Links Mark Tied by Harper.

CASCADES COUNTRY CLUB, Hot Springs, Va., July 26 (AP).—The battle for the Middle Atlantic golf championship will be fought out here tomorrow with Chandler Harper, of Portsmouth, Va., and Bobby Riegel, of Richmond, meeting in the upper bracket. Maury Nee and Roger Peacock will stage an all-Washington match in the other semifinal contest.

The probability that Harper, thrice Virginia amateur champion, might meet Peacock, two-time winner of the Maryland title, looms large, although both men face sterling golfers as dangerous opponents in the semifinals. The semifinals start at 10 a. m., and the finals at 2 p. m., each contest to be 18 holes.

Harper, after eliminating John Davenport, of Richmond, 4 and 3, in the opening round, tied the amateur record of the Cascades course with a par 71 in the quarter-finals to defeat Jimmy Watts, Lynchburg boy, playing for Hot Springs, 3 and 1.

Riegel turned back Hicks Kerr, of Hot Springs, 1 up in 19 hole in the opening round, and then went on to dispose of Morton McCarthy, of Virginia Beach, 3 and 1.

Peacock had a close call in the afternoon when he saw a 2-up advantage on the first nine fade away under the par golf of Frank Roesch, of the Washington Golf and Country Club, and the Indian Spring ace had to go on to the nineteenth hole to win from the accurate-shooting Roesch.

Harper, who won his first Virginia amateur title here in 1930, and who repeated his triumph in 1933 and again this year, has been at the top of his game since the tournament started, but he needed all his golf cunning today to defeat Watts.

He is eager to win the championship and tie the record set by Billy Howell in winning both the State and Middle Atlantic championships in the same year. Incidentally, victory would mean three titles in the Harper family, since Chandler's little sister, Lily, recently took the State woman's championship at Virginia Beach this year.

Bell and Grant In Seabright Net Final

SEABRIGHT, N. J., July 26 (AP).—Berkeley Bell, of New York, playing one of the best matches of his career, overwhelmed Wilmer Allison, second ranking singles player of the country, 6—4, 6—0, 2—6, 7—5, this afternoon to enter the final round of the forty-seventh annual Seabright Invitation Tennis Tournament.

His opponent tomorrow afternoon for the bowl will be Bryan M. Grant, of Atlanta, who triumphed over Henry Prusoff, of Seattle, in another exciting four-set match, 3—6, 6—2, 8—6, 6—3.

In the women's singles final Saturday afternoon Helen Jacobs, of Berkeley, Calif., will oppose Carolin Babcock, of Los Angeles. This morning the National champion defeated Mrs. Mary Greef Harris, Kansas City, 6—1, 6—2, while Miss Babcock put out Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Calif., 3—6, 6—2, 6—4.

Doubles Finalists.

Finalists tomorrow in the women's doubles will be Miss Jacobs and Elizabeth Ryan, of London, against Mrs. John W. Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, and Josephine Cruickshank, of Santa Ana, Calif. The former defeated Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, New York, and Miss Babcock, 6—2, 4—6, 9—7, while the latter eliminated Jane Sharp, of Pasadena, Calif., and Norma Taubele, New York, 6—4, 6—2.

Competing for the men's doubles honors Saturday will be Allison and John W. Van Ryn, who eliminated Grant and Frankie Parker today, 6—4, 0—6, 7—5, versus Bell and Gregory S. Mangin, of Newark, N. J., who downed Wilmer C. Hines, Columbia, S. C., and Prusoff today, 8—6, 6—3.

Red Sox Blast Detroit With 17 Hits, 11-2

Pound Four Pitchers and Even Series; Errors Help Scoring.

DETROIT, July 26 (AP).—The Red Sox sent 17 hits whistling past four Tiger pitchers today to take the final game of their series, 11 to 2, and push Detroit out of first place in the American League.

Henry Johnson went the route for Boston and allowed eight hits. Neither of the Tiger runs was batted in, the first coming in the fourth when Rogell scored on a passed ball and the other in the fifth when Jo-Jo White doubled to get on base, advanced to third on Cochrane's foul and then stole home.

The Tigers called successively on Sorrell, Auker, Marberry and Phillips in an effort to check the Boston offensive. Four Detroit errors helped out the Boston scoring which was made in every inning except the second, third and sixth.

Bedight, $21.20 to $2 Shot, Leads All Way to Triumph in Rockingham Feature

Half-Length Victory Is Recorded

Winner Runs Distance in 1:06 4-5, 2 Seconds Off Track Mark.

SALEM N. H., July 26 (AP).—J. B. Miller's Bedight, which has had a habit of stopping in the stretch since arriving from Chicago, carried his speed for 5½ furlongs today to score an unexpected victory in the feature race at Rockingham Park.

Taking the lead at the start of the dash, the 4-year-old gelding stayed in front all the way and at the finish held a half-length margin over C. J. Meister's Cantersine. Mrs. T. Hunt's Zorana lost the place by a neck, but easily defeated De Valera, the one-time stake horse, for the short end of the purse.

In a wide-open betting race, Cantersine was made the 3-to-1 choice, with Zorana, De Valera and Moane Keala also well played. Bedight returned $21.20 for $2 after running the distance in 1:06 4-5, more than 2 seconds off the track record.

Balfour Trophy Added As Cup Regatta Prize

The first meeting of the trophy committee of the President's Regatta committee was held yesterday, with Edwin N. Graham, vice president of the National Electrical Supply Co., presiding. Graham announced that a number of merchants had promised trophies and cups for the regatta and exhibited the latest addition to the list—the Balfour Trophy—donated by the Balfour Jewelry Co.

HAPPY HELEN, away well and close to the pace in the early running, drew clear when SWEEPOGAN began bearing out nearing the stretch and drew out through the last three-sixteenths, winning with speed in reserve. HOME LOAN moved up stoutly on the inside after going a quarter mile and held on willingly in the drive. RIGHT RANK, reserved early, came with good courage through the last quarter mile. MISS CYLLENE had good speed and went well up from the start. SWEEPOGAN drew clear in the first furlong, was running well out in front when she suddenly bore to the outside. She was unable to recover and was in hand at the end, out past the center of the track. TIGER JOHN was unable to enter into serious contention.

PLAYING ON went down GAY BANNER for the lead before going the opening quarter mile, was steadied along in front and held sway to the end. GAY BANNER, quickest to begin, held on determinedly to the end, though unable to keep pace with the winner. MILD, outrun early, began improving her position after leaving the back stretch and closed with a rush throughout the stretch. MERRY CHATTER finished with a belated burst of speed on the outside through the stretch. CASH SURRENDER, reserved early, was unable to improve his position when called upon. CABOUSE, in close attendance of the leaders, dropped back through the final furlong. LIQUER was never prominent.

PERIODICAL under stout restraint while following the pace for the first half mile, went to the front when called upon and drew out as if much the best. MEROVECH, under restraint early while racing on the outside, wore down CANCEL, but was unable to reach the leaders. BOY CRAZY, a trailer for the first half mile, closed a big gap. CANCEL had good speed, but weakened after going five furlongs. HASTY PETER, reserved early, was unable to improve his position when called upon. The others were never prominent.

BEDIGHT assumed command at once, drew clear in the first few strides, was stayed along in front and held CANTERSINE safe at the end. CANTERSINE, in nearest attendance of the pace throughout, made a determined effort through the stretch, but was not good enough. ZORANA, outpaced, came willingly on the outside in the last quarter mile. DE VALERA, on the outside, was never able to reach the leaders. MOANE KEALA weakened in the drive. MARCH STEP saved ground in the stretch, but was unable to improve his position in the closing test.

BABOO took command in the run to the first turn, was rated along in front under slight restraint and, holding on gamely through the stretch, held ENRO safe. The latter, a trailer early, was put on the inside leaving the back stretch, closed determinedly, but was unable to reach the winner. GRAND ACRE, well placed while racing restrained, continued gamely to the end. YANCEY, well up early, dropped back after leaving the back stretch. Stocks Plunge Downward on Fears of War

New York, July 26 (AP).—Stocks plunged downward today in the widest break since last July as war fears aggravated bearish sentiment and brought a flood of liquidation.

Losses of 2 to 10 points were numerous throughout the list. On the average, share prices sank to the lowest levels recorded since early May, 1933, breaking through the low points of last July as well as last October.

Waves of Liquidation.

Swelled by waves of frightened and distress liquidation after a comparatively quiet first hour of trading, volume on the stock exchange mounted to 3,337,620 shares, the largest since February 7.

Unsettlement caused by the Austrian situation also was mirrored in softness of foreign exchanges against the dollar.

Rails, motors, metals and farm shares bore the brunt of liquidation. Most of these were affected by appraisals of the possible effects of drought losses upon business and farm purchasing power as well as by psychology created by the news from Europe and bearish technical interpretation of action of the market itself in failing to hold at previous support levels.

General Motors Break.

On a turnover of nearly 150,000 shares, General Motors broke more than 4 points and finished 3⅛ lower at 24⅞.

Pressure on motor stocks was attributed in part to unfavorable construction placed on the second quarter earnings report of General Motors, showing a small decline in net profits in face of a 58 per cent gain in dollar value of its business.

Chrysler, Auburn and Nash lost 2 to 4 points.

Early selling pivoted around the rails and by the finish losses of 2 to about 8 points were registered for Union Pacific, Santa Fe, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Great Northern preferred and Northern Pacific.

U. S. Smelting Loss.

U. S. Smelting showed an extreme loss of 10½ points among active issues at the close after having been off more than 12 points at one time. Most issues, however, finished around their low points, although pressure lifted somewhat in the last hour.

U. S. Steel, American Can, Montgomery Ward, Johns Mansville, Sears Roebuck, J. I. Case, Bethlehem Steel and other prominent industrial shares gave up 2 to 6 points under the rush of selling.

Routine trade news was completely obscured by the Austrian situation, drought reports and the liquidation that swept in upon security markets.

Some foreign selling was reported by brokers handling that kind of business, but it was said buying from abroad outweighed the liquidation.

Wool Market.

Boston, July 26 (A.P.) (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—Sales continued very slow in the Boston market, but manufacturers were making inquiries. Efforts to make direct purchases of average 12 months Texas or of good combing fine territory wools at around 70 cents, scoured basis, delivered Eastern mills were reported to have failed to secure more than a few odd lots at that level. A sale of spot 12-month Texas wool was reported at around 80 cents, scoured basis, to a buyer that had an urgent need for wool and was willing to pay the current asking price in order to secure wool of a particular line.

Silk production shows some gain and sales of unfinished silks have continued well.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Wall Street Still Has Found No Satisfactory Explanation for the Sudden Burst of Market Activity Last Week-End.

By Ralph West Robey.

Even before the sharp sell-off yesterday, recent weakness in the stock market had caused many people to wonder about the present relation of stock prices to the business trend. The particular point at issue was whether the new securities exchange control definitely has put an end to fluctuations in stock prices as a forecast of the trend of trade. Needless to say, the case can not be proved one way or the other. Nevertheless, it throws an interesting light on the recent weakness.

The weakness, on the whole, was quite unexpected in the Street. Even those who were pessimistic about the general outlook did not expect a sudden break. They thought merely that prices would drag along without getting any place in either direction. Chart experts, those who forecast on the basis of the past trend, were of the opinion, at least in many instances, that the market would break out of its doldrums on the upside. The speculative fraternity appeared largely just to be sitting back.

Surprise Has Been Accompanied By Growing Volume of Trading.

When the weakness started, accordingly, more or less every one was taken by surprise. It began July 19. On that day the market eased off continuously from its opening, with the volume rising above 600,000 shares for the fourth time during the month. The following day, Friday, the break began in earnest. Volume climbed to 1,242,000 shares, the largest day's trading in some six weeks. The Dow-Jones average for industrials dropped from 97.24 to 94.74. On Saturday volume remained large, but prices were relatively steady. Monday there were 1,880,000 shares traded and the averages fell another three points. Tuesday showed some improvement, but volume continued above 1,500,000 and the averages lost another point. Since then there has been greater quietness.

As past breaks in the market go, of course, all of this has not amounted to much. That, however, is not what worries the Street. In the past it always has been able to assign definite reasons for breaks, even though at times they might not be good reasons. In the current case, except for yesterday, no satisfactory reason has been visible. Business news has not been worse than expected. Nothing disturbing has developed in the way of regulation. The decline has occurred in the face of conditions that should have given continued stability.

Street Turning to Broader Factors for Explanation.

It is for this reason that those seeking an explanation are inclined to reach out for more general considerations. One of these broader reasons is that the threat of regulation has driven a large portion of professional trading out of the market. These are the traders that heretofore always have anticipated business trends and traded accordingly. They are the ones that normally would have sold the market short two months ago when it became evident that we were faced with a business slump and declining profits.

In the absence of these traders, or their unwillingness to sell short in view of the regulation, so the argument runs, the drop of the market was delayed until the business slump became evident to everyone. We are faced with the phenomenon, accordingly, of the stock market being adjusted to changed business conditions after, rather than before, the change.

Such a line of reasoning, it seems to me, is rather far-fetched, and I seriously doubt that it is the explanation for the recent weakness. A more likely explanation, I can not help but feel, is that there is growing uncertainty over the trend of business this fall. In other words, I believe that just as good a case can be made out that the market has been anticipating a further decline of business, as can be that it is making a belated adjustment to a decline that already has occurred.

Bonds Suffer Heaviest Break In Past Year

List Declines 1.5 Points as Sales Volume Rises to $21,473,000.

New York, July 26 (AP).—The bond market suffered its most severe break in more than a year today, coincident with fresh European war rumors and a sharp slump in stocks.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate issues showed a loss of 1.4 points at 84. The next greater previous decline of this index was 1.5 points on July 21, 1933. The trading volume expanded to $21,473,000, par value, the largest aggregate since February 16 last.

Secondary loans and various foreign bonds were the principal victims of the liquidating wave and numerous of these were carried down 1 to 6 or more points. There were a few recoveries in the late dealings, but these were rather feeble. Prime investment groups made a show of resistance, although the majority of these pointed lower.

Federal Loans Weak.

United States Government securities were relatively weak, several of the listed loans dropping more than a full point on a turnover that approximated $5,740,000.

Trading here was the most active in some weeks. Six of the Treasurys were down 1 11-32 to 1 17-32 points, while Federal Farm 3¼s lost 1 2-32.

Railway liens were the principal corporate victims. Among the losers here were Alleghany Corporation 5s of 1949, off 6½ at 55; Santa Fe General 4s, off 1½ at 103; Baltimore & Ohio 4½s, off 5¼ at 52¼; Chesapeake Corporation 5s, off 2 at 100; Denver & Rio Grande 5s, off 3 at 13; Great Northern 7s, off 2¼ at 90½; Illinois Central 4¾s, off 5 at 53; N. Y. Central Convertible 6s, off 2¾ at 111⅝; Nickel Plate 4½s, off 4½ at 53; Northern Pacific 4s, off 2¾ at 97; Southern Pacific 4½s, off 5 at 55¼, and Union Pacific first 4s off 1½ at 107.

Industrials and Utilities.

The heavier industrials and utilities included issues of Western Union, Warner Bros., Walworth, U. S. Rubber, Studebaker, Philadelphia Reading Coal & Iron, Kansas Gas, Interborough Rapid Transit, General Steel Castings, Consolidated Gas, American Water Works and American & Foreign Power.

Three of the International Telephone bonds were off 5 to 6 points Among others were International Paper 6s, off 5¼ at 52; International Cement 5s, off 5 at 88½; Postal Telegraph 5s, off 7⅛ at 37¼ and Otis Steel 6s, off 5 at 62.

Foreign loans reflecting the disturbed political conditions abroad included the Austrian 7s of 1934 and 1957, off 4¼ and 6½ points at 94¼ and 61¼, respectively. Some of the Germans were in supply with the International 5½s and 7s losing 3⅛ points each at 31⅞ and 46, respectively. Italian Public Utility 7s yielded 5¼ points at 77⅞ and Polish Republic 6s sagged 5 at 67.

Curb's Prices In All Groups Driven Lower

Heavy Selling Wave Lifts Day's Trading Volume to 508,000 Shares.

New York, July 26 (AP).—One of the worst selling waves in months broke over the Curb Market today causing losses of 1 to around 8 points. No group was spared. Trading taxed the exchange facilities at times and transfers, which approximated 508,000 shares, were the largest since February 16.

Quotations were quietly irregular at the start, but offerings began to appear in volume around 11 o'clock. Liquidation continued into the late afternoon. Some support was evident near the close, but little recovery occurred.

Many shares dropped with wide gaps between sales. Losses of 5 to around 8 points were suffered by Aluminum Co. of America, Buckeye Pipe, United Gas preferred, Safety Car Heating, Mead Johnson, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Gulf Oil, Fajardo Sugar and Jones & Laughlin.

Other issues finishing down 2 to around 4 included American Cyanamid B, Electric Bond & Share, Greyhound Corporation, Newmont, Lake Shore, Swift International and Distillers Corporation-Seagrams.

Foreign Markets.

London, July 26 (AP).—Developments in Austria unsettled the market and caused a marking down of quotations on the stock exchange today owing to fears of continental selling. Austrian and German bonds dropped two points, while speculative stocks such as Kaffirs and transatlantic issues in which the continent was interested, weakened. Even silt-edged securities lost fractionally. Although selling orders were not large, the market closed weak.

Paris—The Austrian situation and fears of possible repercussions in European politics and trade caused prices on the bourse to break sharply today. Rentes showed net losses of nearly two points, while domestic and foreign industrials likewise declined. The closing was weak.

Daily Credit of Reserve Banks Averages Four Million Lower

The daily average volume of Federal Reserve bank credits outstanding during the week ended July 25, as reported by the Federal Reserve banks, was $2,461,000,444, a decrease of $10,000,000, compared with the preceding week, and an increase of $361,000,000 compared with the corresponding week in 1933.

On July 25 total Reserve bank credit amounted to $2,458,000,000, a decrease of $4,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with decreases of $37,000,000 in money in circulation and $3,000,000 in nonmember deposits and other Federal reserve accounts and an increase of $14,000,000 in monetary gold stock, offset in part by increases of $33,000,000 in member bank reserve balances and $18,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks.

The system's holdings of bills discounted declined $2,000,000, while holdings of bills bought in open market and of United States Government securities remained practically unchanged from last week.

Wheat Slumps As Stocks Sink In Heavy Sales

Austrian Crisis Occupies Market; All Grains Join Declines.

Chicago, July 26 (AP).—Turned topsy-turvey by unsettlement of the New York stock market, grain values underwent two severe smashes today, one just before the day's dealings were ended.

At first, most traders here construed European war-like developments as a stmulus for higher prices on grains, but jolted by tumbles of securities such ideas were later treated in many quarters as more or less obsolete.

A maximum break of 3⅜ cents a bushel from the day's top level for wheat was witnessed. This was afterward almost wholly overcome by big concentrated purchase orders from the East until a renewal of heavy selling ensued in the last few minutes.

Wheat Closes Nervous.

Wheat closed nervous, 1¼ to 2⅝ under yesterday's finish; Corn, seven-eights to 1⅜ down;; oats, one-half to three-quarters off and provisions at 3 cents decline.

Throughout the day, news regarding the Austrian crisis formed the chief pivot of grain market action, whether judged by conventional trade experience regarding possibilities of war prices for breadstuffs and feedstuffs, or judged by the immediate effects on the stock market.

Some observers said that on all setbacks in prices, an increased flow of miscellaneous buying orders for wheat and other grains was apparent, and that this fact was a good deal responsible for enabling the wheat market to close at about 1 cent above the day's low point.

Good Milling Demand.

Good milling demand for wheat was also much in evidence at times. Kansas City reported shippers there had sold 750,000 bushels of hard winter wheat today to mills in Eastern and Central States. Country mills and elevator stocks of domestic wheat were officially estimated today as 51,000,000 bushels, against 61,500,000 bushels a year ago. Using these figures as a basis, unofficial experts calculated the United States' probable carry-over stock of wheat this month as 280,000,000 to 285,000,000 bushels, against 381,000,000 bushels at this time last year.

Corn, oats and other grains gave way in sympathy with the wide-open breaks of wheat prices. For the time being, failure of any worth-while relief from drought to develop had little effect as a counterbalance.

Provisions were sensitive to weakness of cereals.

Iron and Steel Lull Becomes More Marked

Ingot Output Is Placed Now at 27½ Per Cent; Structural Gains.

New York, July 26 (AP).—The summer lull in the iron and steel market has become more pronounced with the passing of the recent spurt in orders from the automotive industry, Iron Age says today in its weekly summary. Ingot output was estimated at 27½ per cent, compared with 28 per cent a week ago.

The chief hope of the producers in overcoming the sag is the "fresh pressure that has been brought to bear to bring out PWA projects that have been tied up and stimulate demand from that source on the eve of completion of a large part of the railroad equipment programs financed by Government funds, the review states.

"Most buyers have good-sized stocks of material which they accumulated in anticipation of price advances," the review adds, "and see no point in adding to their purchases now that their operations are receding. Recent price declines * * * have also had an unsettling influence, encouraging consumers to wait out the market for further possible reductions.

"The uncertainty of the steel outlook is emphasized by the completion of a large part of the rail and railroad equipment programs financed by Government funds and the final rolling of steel for many of the larger PWA projects. Current steel business is made up to an increasing degree of miscellaneous small tonnage of special sizes to round out inventories. The restocking movement on the part of producers, which accounted for the rebound in activity earlier in the month, is apparently nearing its end."

"Structural steel awards," the review said, "have risen from 8,500 tons a week ago to 20,300 tons, while new projects have mounted to 25,650 tons, the largest total, with one exception, since the first week in June.

"Automobile output shows expected staying powers for the season, but no large steel purchases from automobile makers are expected until new models are launched, since present stocks of material are estimated as sufficient to carry the industry for 45 days."

Of the exports, 634,871 tons were destined for the United States and 506,629 for other countries; 124,931 tons of the amount destined for other countries was from the segregated stocks. Approximately 98 per cent of the decreed crop, 2,315,000 tons, has been made so far.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — The Ayes Have It — By Harry J. Tuthill

WELL BOYS, I WAS OVER AND TALKED TO BENNY'S WIFE AND IF SHE'S DOWNHEARTED ABOUT HIM BEING MISSING SINCE THE LODGE HALL FIRE, SHE'S GOT A LOT OF SELF-CONTROL.
DID YOU ASK HER TO IDENTIFY BENNY'S FALSE TEETH THAT WE FOUND IN THE ASHES?
NO! I THOUGHT IT WOULD BE SORT OF DELICATE TO ASK HER TO LOOK AT ALL WE HAVE OF BENNY, WRAPPED IN A PIECE OF OLD NEWSPAPER. ANYHOW, SHE SLAMMED THE DOOR AND.....
TOUGH!
LET ME LOOK AT THOSE TEETH AGAIN, GEORGE.

OH BENNY! YOU'LL BE AVENGED, AND HOW!
BOYS, WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO ABOUT THE BOLSHEVIKI ELEMENT OF THE LODGE SETTING FIRE TO THE HALL AND PUTTING POOR BENNY ON THE FRITZ?
WHY NOT PUT THEM ON TRIAL ACCORDING TO THE BY-LAWS OF OLD BOUNDER LODGE NO. 9?
WHAT ABOUT A HALL?
LISTEN, WHY NOT HOLD THE MEETING RIGHT HERE IN GEORGE'S HOME? ALL THOSE IN FAVOR SIGNIFY BY SAYING AYE.
COME ON GEORGE, LET'S MAKE IT UNANIMOUS.

Walt Mason, Himself

Heal Thyself.

"Physician, heal thyself," the ancient maxim goes, but from his cupboard shelf the doctor takes no dose. The drugs around the place will do for other gents, but in the doctor's case they are not worth 3 cents. The doctor, like the rest, is subject to disease, with chilblains in his breast, and spavins on his knees; he finds, to his despair, that he has prickly heat, and he has falling hair, and bunions on his feet; while saving human lives, prescribing wholesome pills, he finds he has the hives, and ague, with its chills. In search of fame and pelf he dopes the other guys, but does he heal himself? The doctor is too wise. "I'll let Dame Nature cure my ailments," he decrees; "her method's slow but sure, and it's bound to please. Man's head is full of bugs, and it has bats in store, if he depends on drugs when he is sick and sore." Along his route he jumps with healing in his wings, although he has the mumps, and divers pains and stings. At last he falls so ill he can not go his round; his feet are damp and chill, he feels his tired heart pound. But from his cupboard shelf he takes no drug that knocks; he will not heal himself—he calls in other docs.
